

UNDERWORLD AIDS HUNT FOR CHILD

Former Premier Briand Of France Succumbs

FAMOUS STATESMAN HAD SERVED TWELVE TERMS AS PREMIER

Had Recently Retired
After Long Public
Career

PARIS, March 7.—Official announcement of the death of Aristide Briand was made in the French chamber of deputies this afternoon.

The veteran statesman died at his country estate at Cocherel at 1:30 p. m. He was 68 years of age.

Briand had returned to Cocherel only Saturday from a conference in Paris Friday with Premier Tardieu on the proposed Danubian entente and the question of the League of Nations loan to Austria. He appeared much improved in health and rumors circulated in the afternoon that he had died were denied by servants at his home in Paris.

Briand was twelve time premier, member of eighteen cabinets and internationally known as an apostle of peace. His name was linked with that of Frank B. Kellogg, then American secretary of state, as joint-author of the Kellogg anti-war pact though it was Briand who actually made the proposal that led to the negotiation of that famous treaty.

Gradually failing health and a shifting political arena led to his retirement from the foreign office with the recent reorganization of the Laval cabinet, the predecessor to the present Tardieu ministry.

Aristide Briand, twelve times premier of France and a member of eighteen cabinets was so consistently pictured as the faithful wheel horse of the chariot of peace that the world lost sight of the fact that he was one of France's greatest patriots.

Even the people of France thought of Briand as an internationalist first and a Frenchman second. That was tragically illustrated in the spring of 1931 when the national assembly withheld from him the highest honor within its gift and elected Paul Doumer president of the Third Republic.

Throughout the three decades of his brilliant career Briand was the leading architect of peace in the Old World. Yet as France's "Permanent Foreign Minister" during the last half of that time he never for one moment forgot his country's vital interests or failed to fight for them. No French nationalist was more unyielding than Briand in maintaining the Quai d'Orsay's thesis that security for France must come before disarmament.

The more conciliatory and more astute—though no less pertinacious—manner in which the "Man of Locarno" defended this prime tenet of French foreign policy marked one essential difference between him and lesser contemporaries: Briand, master parliamentarian of Europe, knew how to say a firm "No" without arousing ire.

The greatest services to his country were performed during and after the war. Every French schoolboy knows the leading part he played in drafting the Locarno pact, his co-authorship of the Kellogg-Briand pact for the outlawry of war and his sponsorship of the dream of uniting the warring nations of Europe into a peaceful federation.

It is Briand's services as a man of war that are forgotten. Before 1914 it was he who saw to it that France was well supplied with field artillery. It was Briand who, in the face of bitter opposition from "Tiger" Clemenceau and Lord Kitchener, urged the Allies to drive towards Vienna through Saloniki, where the first breach was made in the military wall by the Central Powers.

Again, it was Briand, who at the war councils of the Allies, most eloquently urged unity of command.

Like Georges Clemenceau, who became his bitterest political enemy, Briand entered the political arena as an extreme radical and then, like many other French statesmen, progressed by gradual stages to a safe-and-sane liberalism, rising in his greatness above party limitations.

His political career was given definite direction in 1906 when he was expelled from the Socialist Party for accepting the post of Minister of Education and Worship in the middle-of-the-road Sarrien cabinet.

It was while holding this portfolio, his first cabinet post, that Briand first drew the eyes of the world by the suave, astute manner in which he administered the law separating church and state.

STORM LASHES EASTERN SEABOARD

WINTER STRIKES OHIO ON BLIZZARD'S WINGS AND RECORDS TUMBLE

New Low Temperatures
Recorded; Traffic
Fatalities

By International News Service

Ohio was lashed today by severe winter weather that threw snow drifts across main highways, turned hill roads into icy slides, and made traffic hazardous everywhere.

As the temperature fell to near the zero mark the March lion growled a threat of even a sharper, more bitter cold.

Traffic on the national road was hampered all day yesterday and through the night by a high wind that caused frequent accidents.

In the vicinity of Cambridge the ice on the hills was reported to be "the worst in years."

The snow swirled into drifts at Bridgeport and St. Clairsville endangering motorists already harassed by wind.

Cold weather records went tumbling everywhere. In Cincinnati the thermometers registered 10.9, breaking a mark that stood for fourteen months.

Despite the raging blizzard which made pavements icy and dimmed visibility, traffic fatalities over the week-end were at a minimum, an International News Service checkup today showed.

Two tragic accidents in Richland County cost five lives. Three suicides were reported in various sections of the state, and one man died from a five-year-old injury suffered in a mine-cave-in.

Miss Lucille Lofland, 20, and Seymour M. Kooker, 21, both of Plymouth, were killed instantly when their automobile was struck by a Big Four train at Shiloh. Witnesses said Kooker apparently did not see the train approaching. Friends said the couple had planned to be married soon.

Two women and a man were killed and two girls injured when their small sedan smashed into the rear of a heavy truck on the Mansfield-Canton Road.

The victims were Mrs. Pearl Edler, 38, Miss Alva Ulrich, 19, and Carl Wiggs, 38, all of Gallon. Miss Maritta Dirsch, 18, and Miss Mary Steiner, 19, also of Gallon, were hurt.

KIDNAPING LEADER SOUGHT WHILE PALS AWAIT JURY ACTION

Former Rum King Named
As Brains Of De Jute
Abduction

WARREN, O., Mar. 7.—While police searched for a former rum "king" as the leader of the ring, a special session of the Trumbull County grand jury was called today to consider indictments against two men involved in the kidnaping of James DeJute, 12, of Niles, O.

The two suspects, Dowell Hargrave, 30, and John DeMarco, 31, were held in separate jails here. They were arrested Saturday when the boy, held a captive in an abandoned roadside for three days, was found.

Described by the two men in custody as the "brains" of the outfit, the hunted man was said to have been forced to turn to a new racket when the rum-running business in this district was hit by present economic conditions, according to Sheriff John Risher.

Hargrave and DeMarco, questioned separately yesterday by Risher and Detective W. J. Harrison, were reported to have revealed the identity of the ex-rum "king" to the investigators. Searchers said they were unable to find the man at his old haunts.

In the meantime, the nervous DeJute family at Niles attempted to resume its ordinary routine of living following the terrifying experience last week.

The kidnap victim, unharmed by his captors, was heaped with honors and presents by his friends yesterday, and planned to return to school today. Mrs. DeJute, the boy's mother, was still confined to her bed as a result of the strain, but was expected to recover.

OHIO'S DRIVE ON HOARDING READY

COLUMBUS, O., March 7.—Ohio's state-wide anti-hoarding organization was almost completed today.

Former U. S. Senator Alice Pomerenne, state chairman, announced that thirty-two local units are already definitely organized, and that the remainder of the organization work will be done rapidly.

Pomerenne was optimistic about the "Baxy bond" sales campaign, to start March 15, after receiving word from Col. Frank Knox of Chicago, national chairman, saying that the nationwide campaign has already put $112,000,000 back in circulation.

SCHOOL HAS BIRTHDAY

DELAWARE, O., Mar. 7.—The nineteenth birthday of Ohio Wesleyan University was to be celebrated here today with special chapel services.

DENIED HONORS

PARIS—Aristide Briand, who served his native France as premier more often than any other French statesman—a round dozen times—was not even a knight of the Legion of Honor.

French laws prohibit the decoration of a Deputy and the faithful voters of Nantes have never failed to return Briand to the Chamber every year since his first election twenty-nine years ago.

So the man who has been called the "Permanent Foreign Minister" of France was never "free" to accept the honor which has been conferred upon almost every Frenchman in public life.

REPORT FIVE DEAD, FORTY MISSING, AS GALE SWEEPS COAST

Fear Coastguardsmen Dead; Shipping Is In Distress

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., March 7.—Coast guards today were battling heavy seas in an effort to rescue the crew of a two-masted sloop in distress off the coast here. A total of five deaths and forty missing was exacted by the seventy-mile-an-hour gale that has lashed the coast for the past twenty-four hours.

The sloop is thought to be the "Anna" with Captain Gunnar Peterson, of Atlantic City, aboard. It was not learned definitely whether the sloop carried a crew of two or five men.

Five fishing boats, containing about forty men, from the Cold Spring Harbor Fisheries, near Wildwood, N. J., were still listed as missing.

NEW YORK, Mar. 7.—The lashing northeastern gale and driving rain which played havoc on land and sea from Maine to Florida and probably cost the lives of five coast guardsmen from the base at Atlantic City, drove inland today and gripped the eastern coast in sharp wintry weather.

Philadelphia, New York, Savannah, Jacksonville, Washington, D. C., upstate New York and the New England states bore the brunt of the storm yesterday.

The gale attained a maximum velocity of sixty-four miles an hour, and was accompanied by torrential downpours. Ships were imperiled, lighting and communications systems put out of service, trees torn up, windows blown in, and signs and cornices swept from their moorings.

The coast guard men were believed to have drowned after going out in boats to aid a fishing schooner in distress in the storm-tossed seas.

Captain James Turner, Surfman William E. Barton and Machinist Harold Livingston went out into the seething ocean in one boat. Half a mile from shore, it capsized.

Turner, alone of the three men thrown into the water, was washed up by the mountainous waves on shore. A second boat was launched, manned by Boatwain's Mate Marvin E. Rhoades, Surfman John Barnett and Charles Graham, to search for the missing crew.

Once beyond the thundering surf, the boat vanished from sight and nothing was heard of the crew. A rescue expedition was to set out today in hope of finding the men.

The coast guard men had gone out in response to distress signals from the auxiliary fishing sloop Anna, of Atlantic City, in trouble ten miles off shore.

A blizzard, reported to be the worst since that at the inauguration of President Taft struck Washington. Heavy snow fell in upper Pennsylvania, in some places being nine inches deep.

Throughout the East, temperatures which had been mild, rapidly dropped to below freezing.

Cold and snow were predicted for today and in near New York. This, it was feared, would hamper rescue efforts at sea and delay a number of ships due to arrive at Eastern ports.

Police emergency squads here were kept busy repairing damage done by the storm. Trees and telegraph poles hurled by the wind across roads blocked traffic in many sections; automobile drivers were endangered by the sleet left in the wake of rain and hail.

Ten miles from Absecon Light, a gasoline launch rescued the crew of the fishing boat L-5085, which was abandoned.

Many small craft were rescued by coast patrols.

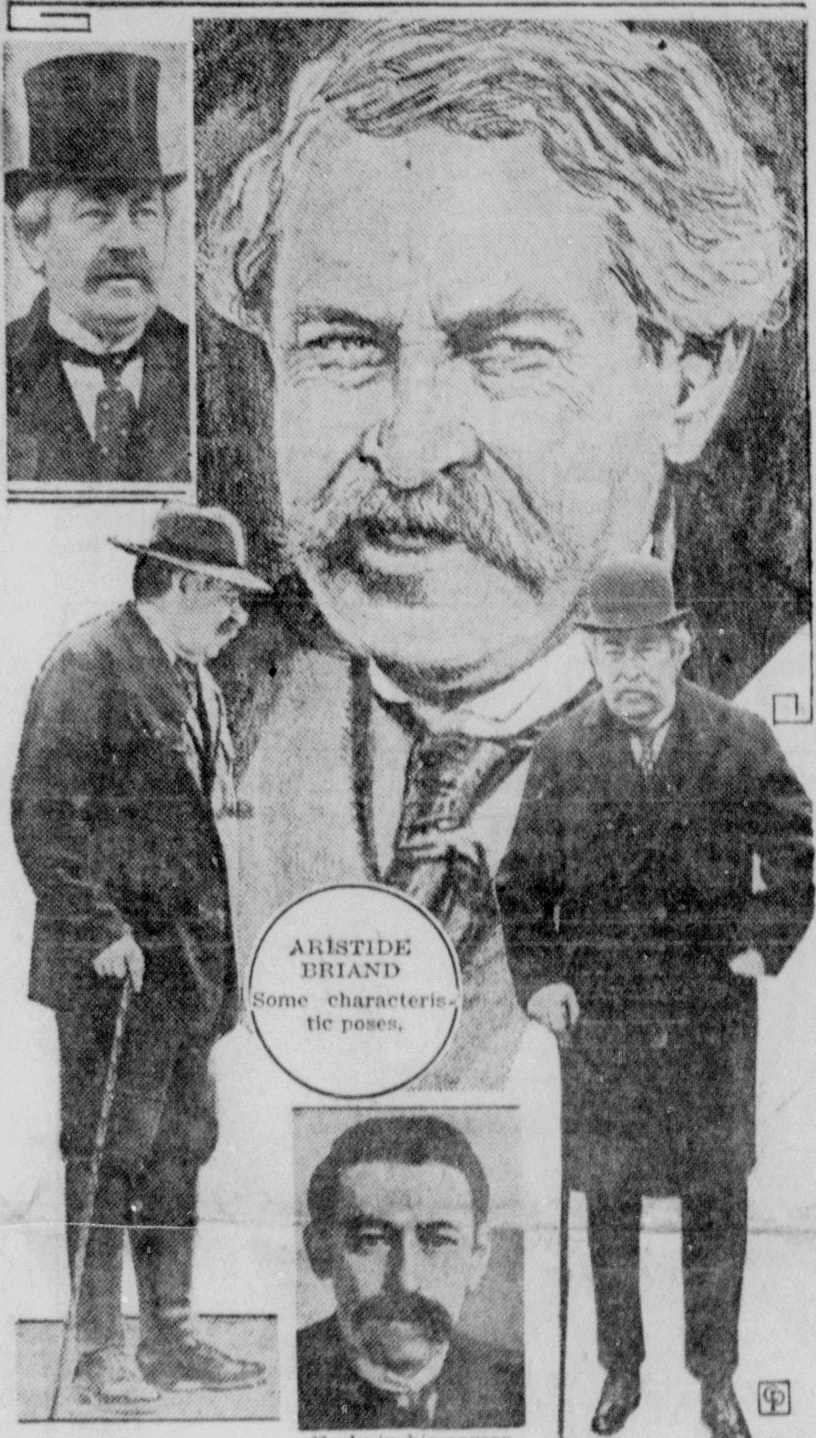

Several show room windows of automobile concerns and others along upper Broadway were blown in by the wind.

Hagerstown, Md., for a while was shut off from the rest of the world when its communication systems were crippled by the storm.

YELLOW-STREAKS GREATEST DANGER

CINCINNATI, O., Mar. 7.—"America's danger isn't in the Reds, but in the yellow-streaks," Conrad H. Mann, former head of the National Fraternal Order of Eagles, today had made that declaration at a lodge initiation here which Governor White and former Governor Myers Y. Cooper risked frozen noses to attend.

GREAT FRENCH STATESMAN CALLED

Aristide Briand, former premier of France, succumbed Monday at his country home near Paris. Various views of him are shown above.

JAPAN WILL WITHDRAW FROM LEAGUE; EXPECT NEW BATTLE

TOKYO, Mar. 7.—A heavy guard was thrown about the offices of the American-owned newspaper, Japan Advertiser, tonight when the police received rumors that a mob would attempt to attack employees and damage the plant.

The American embassy was placed under similar protection and police were stationed about headquarters of the League of Nations Manchurian commission of which Major General Frank McCoy of the United States army is a member.

TOKYO, Mar. 7.—Naotake Sato, Japanese member of the League of Nations council, has been instructed to make formal arrangements for Japan's withdrawal from the League as soon as the Shanghai controversy has been settled.

The action, contemplated for some time, was brought to a head Friday and Saturday at the extraordinary assembly of the League when delegates of the smaller nations openly and bitterly attacked Japan and defended China in the Shanghai conflict.

The government now is of the mind that either China or Japan must withdraw from the League. International News Service learned authoritatively today. Japan considers China an unorganized state, while other nations do not, and Japan does not want to participate in an organization of which China is a member.

The constitution of the League requires that a country planning withdrawal must give two years' notice before it is granted. Although Japan would constitutionally be a member for two years, practically she would not, since she plans to cease participation immediately after the Shanghai deliberations are completed.

The main points on which Japan has been scored at the council and assembly meetings have been that she was violating China's territorial and sovereign integrity, while Japan denies that China has these.

Shanghai, March 7.—With the arrival of Japanese and Chinese reinforcements a new battle was in preparation tonight near Taitung, twenty miles northwest of Shanghai.

The Japanese disembarked 10,000 troops at Woosung during the day after landing 1,000 in the international settlement. This brought the total number of Japanese forces in the Shanghai area to between 85,000 and 70,000 men.

GANGLAND LEADERS ASSUME TASK AFTER LEGAL FORCES FAIL

Lindberghs Name Two Emissaries From Beyond
Law To Negotiate With Kidnapers; Suspect
Still Held; Claws Still Being Probed

NEW YORK, March 7.—Two "goodwill" ministers of the underworld today worked through shadowy channels in an attempt to recover the kidnapped Lindbergh baby.

Somewhere in the out-of-bounds kingdom, "Salvy" Spitalo and his henchman, Irving Bitz, were spreading leads that they were ready to negotiate, in the name of the Lindberghs, with the baby-stealers.

These two strange ambassadors of humanitarianism bore the official portfolio of authority delivered to them by Col. and Mrs. Charles Augustus Lindbergh, parents of the missing 20-months-old infant.

It read:

"If the kidnapers of our child are unwilling to deal direct we fully authorize 'Salvy' Spitalo and Irving Bitz to act as our go-betweens. We will also follow any other method suggested by the kidnapers that we can be sure will bring the return of our child."

Signed: "Charles A. Lindbergh, Anne Lindbergh."

It was the third desperate plea of the bereaved parents made to those who so cruelly snatched the golden-haired dimpled babe from his nursery crib into limbo last Tuesday night at Hopewell, N. J.

Various theories followed the latest move of the Lindberghs in naming the two well-known underworld figures as possible intermediaries.

Some believed that the kidnapers had already communicated with the parents and suggested Spitalo and Bitz as go-betweens.

Some suggested that advisers had counseled that Colonel Lindbergh find two men with the confidence of the underworld to act for him.

Some put forward the theory that Spitalo and Bitz had voluntarily offered to try and get back the baby.

Officials were unanimous in declaring that the go-betweens named had nothing to do with the kidnaping.

Through their latest move, the Lindberghs indicated their belief that the crime had been performed by professionals and not by amateurs.

Spitalo, in accepting the strange appointment, told an emissary of the Lindberghs that he was only too glad to do what he could to recover the baby.

"I have two children of my own," he said.

He said his only fear of failure was in the event that an amateur or maniac had committed the kidnaping.

New York police are giving the two men a clear hand in their negotiations job.

"I did not ever know of their appointment until I heard it over the radio," said Police Commissioner Edward J. Mulrooney. "We are not interested in the two men and would not think of offering any kind of police interference which would disturb the negotiations."

While the main interest in the nation-wide hunt for the Lindbergh child shifted from New Jersey to the activities of the two New York go-betweens, Henry Johnson, sailor sweetheart of Betty Gow, the baby's nurse, was still being questioned.

Johnson was secretly taken from Hartford, Conn., to Newark, N. J., Saturday night. Johnson, whose wife is employed as a maid in the home of Mrs. Dwight W. Morrow, mother of Mrs. Lindbergh, was also questioned and later released.

It was reported that Johnson might be released today.

Junge and his wife and Johnson and Betty Gow have been friends for a long time, and on the night the kidnaping had arranged to go out on a foursome party, according to what they said to police.

Johnson called in his automobile at the Junge home in Englewood, N. J., picked up Junge and drove him to the home of Mrs. Morrow in Englewood to get Mrs. Junge, it was said.

Mrs. Junge told them that Betty Gow had telephoned she could not go on the party because the Lindberghs had unexpectedly decided to remain at Hopewell.

Johnson telephoned Miss Gow upon hearing this and told her he was going to drive to Hartford to visit his brother there the next day, police said.

After telephoning, Johnson and Junge drove around Englewood, police said they were told. After the drive, Johnson was said to have related that he returned home and went to bed.

Johnson's roommate said he awakened Johnson early on Wednesday.

DRUNK WHO TURNED DESPERADO SOUGHT

BUENOS AIRES, O., March 7.—A drunk man who turned desperado, shot out lights in the coaches of a New York Central passenger train and drove frightened passengers under the seats with revolver fire was hunted by police in this section today.

Members of the train crew beat him over the head and ejected him from the train at Cardington, near here, after he had torn open luggage of several passengers and scattered it along the tracks.

The train was delayed for forty-five minutes by his antics. Flourishing his revolver, he dared members of the crew to advance on him as he sat pulling the train's emergency cord.

Railroad police said they took a partially-filled bottle of whisky from him before throwing him from the train.

Law To Negotiate With Kidnapers; Suspect
Still Held; Clews Still Being Probed

NEW YORK, March 7.—Two "goodwill" ministers of the underworld today worked through shadowy channels in an attempt to recover the kidnapped Lindbergh baby.

Somewhere in the out-of-bounds kingdom, "Salvy" Spitalo and his henchman, Irving Bitz, were spreading leads that they were ready to negotiate, in the name of the Lindberghs, with the baby-stealers.

These two strange ambassadors of humanitarianism bore the official portfolio of authority delivered to them by Col. and Mrs. Charles Augustus Lindbergh, parents of the missing 20-months-old infant.

It read: "If the kidnapers of our child are unwilling to deal direct we fully authorize 'Salvy' Spitalo and Irving Bitz to act as our go-betweens. We will also follow any other method suggested by the kidnapers that we can be sure will bring the return of our child."

Signed "Charles A. Lindbergh" and "Anne Lindbergh."

It was the third desperate plea of the bereaved parents made to those who so cruelly snatched the golden-haired dimpled babe from his nursery crib into limbo last Tuesday night at Hopewell, N. J.

Various theories followed the latest move of the Lindberghs in naming the two well-known underworld figures as possible intermediaries.

Some believed that the kidnapers had already communicated with the parents and suggested Spitalo and Bitz as go-betweens.

Some suggested that advisers had counseled that Colonel Lindbergh find two men with the confidence of the underworld to act for him.

Some put forward the theory that Spitalo and Bitz had "voluntarily" offered to try and get back the baby.

Offhandness was unanimous in declaring that the go-betweens named had nothing to do with the kidnaping.

Through their latest move, the Lindberghs indicated their belief that the crime had been performed by professionals and not by amateurs.

Spitalo, in accepting the strange appointment, told an emissary of the Lindberghs that he was only too glad to do what he could to recover the baby.

"I have two children of my own," he said.

He said his only fear of failure was in the event that an amateur or maniac had committed the kidnaping.

New York police are giving the two men a clear hand in their negotiations.

"I did not ever know of their appointment until I heard it over the radio," said Police Commissioner Edward P. Mulrooney. "We are not interested in the two men and would not think of offering any kind of police interference which would disturb the negotiations."

While the main interest in the nation-wide hunt for the Lindbergh child shifted from New Jersey to the activities of the two New York go-betweens, Henry Johnson, said a sweetheart of Betty Gow, the baby's nurse, was still being questioned.

Johnson was secretly taken from Hartford, Conn., to Newark, N. J., Saturday night. Johnson Junge, whose wife is employed as a maid in the home of Mrs. Dwight W. Morrow, mother of Mrs. Lindbergh, was also questioned and later released.

It was reported that Johnson might be released today.

Junge and his wife and Johnson and Betty Gow have been friends for a long time, and on the night of the kidnaping had arranged to go out on a foursome party, according to what they said to police.

Johnson called in his automobile at the Junge home in Englewood, N. J., picked up Junge and drove him to the home of Mrs. Morrow in Englewood to get Mrs. Junge, it was said.

Mrs. Junge told them that Betty Gow had telephoned she could not go on the party because the Lindberghs had unexpectedly decided to remain at Hopewell.

Johnson telephoned Miss Gow upon hearing this and told her he was going to drive to Hartford to visit his brother there the next day, police said.

After telephoning Johnson and Junge drove around Englewood, police said they were told after the drive, Johnson was said to have related that he returned home and went to bed.

Johnson's roommate said he awakened Johnson early on Wednesday.

DRUNK WHO TURNED DESPERADO SOUGHT

BUENOS AIRES, O., March 7.—A drunk on man who turned desperado, shot out lights in the coaches of a New York Central passenger train and drove frightened passengers under the seats with revolver fire was hunted by police in this section today.

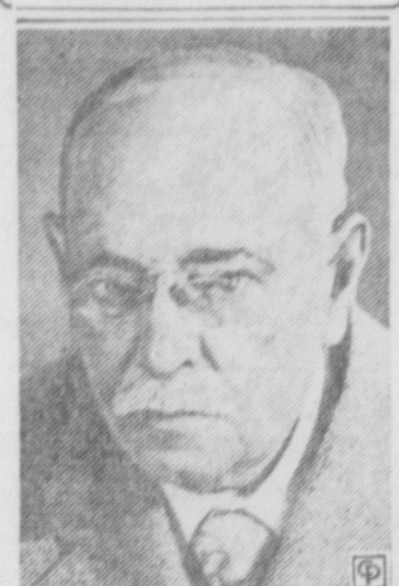

Members of the train crew beat him over the head and ejected him from the train at Cardington, near here, after he had torn open luggage of several passengers and scattered it along the tracks.

The train was delayed for forty-five minutes by his antics. Flourishing his revolver, he dared members of the crew to advance on him as he sat pulling the train's emergency cord.

Railroad police said they took a partially-filled bottle of whiskey from him before throwing him from the train.

HOLLYWOOD FIGHTS DEMAND TO BAR FOREIGN STARS

Hollywood motion picture leaders are up in arms against proposed national legislation that would bar actors and actresses. Congressman Samuel Dickstein of New York, chairman of the immigration committee of the house of representatives, has demanded that foreign stars be forced to become citizens and that alien actors of mediocre ability be barred from this country. You would never have seen most of the stars pictured above were such a law in effect.

FACE TRIAL FOR KILLING MASTER

Gentro Akiyama, Japanese servant to the late William Schatz, wealthy manufacturer of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., is shown with his sister-in-law, Sadako Otsuka, also a servant, conferring with their lawyer, J. L. Rosenberg, as they go on trial charged with the murder of their former master. Mrs. Florence Carozza, friend of Schatz, will testify as an eyewitness to the crime. Akiyama was discharged shortly before the slaying.

BARRYMORES TO MAKE MOVIES

For Mother's Sake "Martha Washington" Herself

Held in Chicago on a charge of extortion, Donald Imhoff, seventeen-year-old honor student at Oak Park High School, is shown with his mother, Mrs. Elizabeth Imhoff, after his arrest. The youth, according to police, admitted the charge, but said he embarked upon his short career of obtaining money by threats in order to provide for his mother. Colonial color was lifted from history's pages at the annual Beaux Arts Ball, held recently at New York. The George Washington Bicentennial influence was very apparent in many of the lovely costumes worn by society notables. Above is Mrs. Walter Lathrop Johnson, of Briarcliff Manor, New York, in the costume she wore as she enacted the role of Martha Washington in one of the historic tableaux presented at the ball. The gown is of blue taffeta and white satin. Its quilted petticoat is an exact duplicate of the gown worn by Martha Washington in the most popular portrait of her.

FAMILY OF NEW CABINET MEMBER

Here is the family of Ogden L. Mills, of New York, the new secretary of the treasury, who has had a busy career in law and finance despite the fact that he didn't have to work at all because he is a multimillionaire. Mills is 48. He was a congressman prior to becoming undersecretary of the treasury.

FAMOUS STATESMAN HAD SERVED TWELVE TERMS AS PREMIER

of which he himself was one of the principal authors.

Briand was born at Nantes May 28, 69 years ago, the son of a blacksmith. As a young man he was admitted to the bar at St. Nazaire. He was 40 years old before he was elected to the Chamber of Deputies from St. Etienne after several unsuccessful campaigns. Some time before that he had founded the Socialist (now Communist) newspaper, l'Humanite, with Jean Jaures, whose assassination in 1914 removed the last hope of averting the World War.

As early as 1891 Briand had espoused the cause of the labor unions at the Workingmen's Congress at Nantes. And to the end of his life he remained by choice a man of the people, something of a bohemian at heart.

But by 1910 Briand had realized that the country came before the interests of any group within it. During the railroad strike of that year he crushed syndicalism in France by the clever expedient of placing the railroads under martial law, calling the strikers to the colors and then assigning them to operate the railroads.

Briand formed the first cabinet on July 24, 1909. The last government headed by him fell in 1929, but up to the day of his death the possibility always remained that he would be recalled to the helm of the ship of state.

A resourceful, supple politician as well as a statesman, Briand was almost grotesque in appearance—short of stature and with a huge round head which seemed to weigh too heavily on his hunched shoulders. Immensely bushy eyebrows over cavernous pale blue eyes, shaggy hair and a certain carelessness in dress accentuated his picturesque appearance.

But Briand was also the greatest orator in Europe whose face and figure were forgotten once he began to speak. When he mounted the rostrum in the chamber of deputies silence would fall, as if by magic, upon 600 shouting, disconcerting deputies.

And when he loosed his violin-like voice, playing upon the emotions and reason of his listeners with the same subtle skill with which he was wont to play a fish in his rural retreat at Cocherel, Briand's slumberous eyes opened wide. He was transformed into a mighty fisher of men—who usually handled all who nibbled at his verbal bait.

Briand died a bachelor. When reports that he was about to marry a beautiful French woman were current the statesman characteristically remarked: "No young woman would want to marry me and I would not marry an old one."

When Briand was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize in 1926 he agreed to accept it only on condition that the award should be divided between himself and the late Gustav Stresemann, the German foreign minister, with whom he strove to heal the wounds of the war.

All's Well That—

That love will find a way was again proven when Wallace Estes, noted Pacific coast athlete, remarried Allene Cooper of Virginia at San Mateo, Calif., the other day. The couple, shown above, were first married two years ago, Estes having, however, failed to legally discard the first Mrs. Estes. The Cooper-Estes union was annulled and Mrs. Estes secured a divorce, leaving the couple free to marry again.

MUSCULAR-RHEUMATIC PAINS

DRAW them out with a "counter-irritant." Muscular lumbago, soreness and stiffness—generally respond to good old Musterole. Doctors call it a "counter-irritant" because its warming action penetrates and stimulates blood circulation and helps to draw out infection and pain. It gets action and is not just a salve. But do not stop with one application. Apply this soothing, cooling, healing ointment generously to the affected area once every hour for five hours. Used by millions for over 20 years. Recommended by many doctors and nurses. All druggists.

To Mothers—Musterole is also made in milder form for babies and small children. Ask for Children's Musterole.

Townsley Chick Chat

The chap who wrote the song about finding a MILLION DOLLAR BABY in the FIVE and TEN, was not thinking about BABY CHICKS.

A GOOD chick is the only kind worth having, and GOOD chicks are seldom found on the bargain counter.

Look beyond the price of the chicks to see what VALUES are offered.

When "Thorogood" Accredited chicks from accurately blood tested flocks cost so little, why gamble on chicks of unknown quality. Visit the Townsley Hatchery now and arrange for a supply of "Thorogood Chicks," the chicks you can raise.

of which he himself was one of the principal authors.

Briand was born at Nantes May 28, 69 years ago, the son of a blacksmith. As a young man he was admitted to the bar at St. Nazaire. He was 40 years old before he was elected to the Chamber of Deputies from St. Etienne after several unsuccessful campaigns. Some time before that he had founded the Socialist (now Communist) newspaper, "Humanite," with Jean Jaures, whose assassination in 1914 removed the last hope of averting the World War.

As early as 1894 Briand had espoused the cause of the labor unions at the Workingmen's Congress at Nantes. And to the end of his life he remained by choice a man of the people, something of a bohemian at heart.

But by 1910 Briand had realized that the country came before the interests of any group within it. During the railroad strike of that year he crushed syndicalism in France by the clever expedient of placing the railroads under martial law, calling the strikers to the colors and then assigning them to operate the railroads.

Briand formed the first cabinet on July 24, 1909. The last government headed by him fell in 1929, but up to the day of his death the possibility always remained that he would be recalled to the helm of the ship of state.

A resourceful, supple politician as well as a statesman, Briand was almost grotesque in appearance—small of stature and with a huge round head which seemed to weigh too heavily on his hunched shoulders. Immensely bushy eyebrows over cavernous pale blue eyes, shaggy hair and a certain carelessness in dress accentuated his picturesque appearance.

But Briand was also the greatest orator in Europe whose face and figure were forgotten once he began to speak. When he mounted the rostrum in the chamber of deputies silence would fall, as if by magic, upon 600 shouting, desk-pounding deputies.

And when he loosed his violin-like voice, playing upon the emotions and reason of his listeners with the same subtle skill with which he was wont to play a fish in his rural retreat at Cocherel, Briand's slumberous eyes opened wide. He was transformed into a mighty fisher of men—who usually landed all who nibbled at his verbal bait.

Briand died a bachelor. When reports that he was about to marry a beautiful French woman were current the statesman characteristically remarked:

"No young woman would want to marry me and I would not marry an old one."

When Briand was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize in 1926 he agreed to accept it only on condition that the award should be divided between himself and the late Gustav Stresemann, the German foreign minister, with whom he strove to heal the wounds of the war.

"I don't think that is so or Colonel Lindbergh would have heard from them by now," said Major Schoeffel.

The major said the putting of the case in the hands of the two underworld figures was done by Colonel Lindbergh without consulting any of the state police.

Like Commissioner Mulrooney, in New York, the New Jersey authorities indicated they would not interfere with the work of the intermediaries.

However, the forces at the emergency police headquarters on the Lindbergh estate at Hopewell continued to run down the Niagara of "tips" and alleged clues which kept pouring in.

The ladder used by the kidnapers to climb to the second-story Lindbergh nursery remained the most important clue.

The New Jersey Lumbermen's Association has its members throughout the state checking up on sales during the past month in an attempt to trace the material used in the ladder's construction.

Thomas D. Green, president of the American Hotel Association, has sent telegrams to each of 20,000 hotels urging employees to be on the alert for suspicious characters with babies.

Mayor Albert Giese of Hopewell suggested that the cordon of police guarding the Lindbergh estate should be withdrawn, at least temporarily, in order to give the abductors an opportunity to communicate with the parents.

"Whoever took the baby had the brain to plan a program and the nerve to carry it through," said Mayor Giese. "They did not have the intelligence to measure the overwhelming popular resentment which the crime would arouse."

"They did not force the tremendous force that has been massed to apprehend them. I believe it would be a good thing to declare a twenty-four hour to forty-eight hour truce to give the kidnapers a chance to communicate in person or by message."

Aside from the police, a private detective is working in the interests of the Lindberghs. He is John J. Fogarty, special Nassau County investigator, who is being employed directly by Colonel Henry Breckenridge, lawyer and friend of the Lindberghs.

Stargart, who worked on the Starr Faithful and other notable cases, was reported to be the one who suggested using Spitalo and Bitts as go-betweens with the kidnapers.

A Philadelphia woman was taken into custody by an investigator when she stepped from a bus from Camden near the entrance to the Lindbergh estate. She said she had the "dope" on the case but would tell nobody but Colonel Lindbergh.

Later she revealed her "dope"—that the kidnapers flew over the Lindbergh estate Saturday intending to drop the child in a parachute but lost their nerve at the last moment.

BIBLE THOUGHT FOR TODAY

Shall mortal man be more just than God? shall a man be more pure than his maker?—Job, iv, 17.

SPEEDING JUSTICE

One of the most important of President Hoover's proposals in his special message on the administration of justice is that urging the grant of the so-called "rule-making power" to the federal courts. Much criticism is directed against courts for alleged dilatory tactics and failure to cut through the red tape of technicalities, which in fact is unjustified. Most state courts are not masters in their own houses. Procedure, in most cases, is not regulated by the judges, but by the lawmakers.

For years a campaign has gone on within bench and bar to permit the courts to assume responsibility in a situation where if faults develop they are the ones blamed. Laymen, generally, do not understand the importance of the issue. In many state courts, judges are governed by a rigid code of procedure prescribed by the Legislature, so minute and inflexible that it often gives rise to an appeal by lawyers to technicalities, rather than to the rights and wrongs of a case.

The American Bar Association had led a campaign to give the federal courts, through the Supreme Court, "the rule-making power." President Coolidge backed the plan. Mr. Taft, both as President and Chief Justice vigorously indorsed it. "I am strongly convinced that the best method of improving judicial procedure at law is to empower the Supreme Court to do it through the medium of the rules of the court, as in equity," he said on one occasion. Under the present system, he declared, "the poor man is at a fearful disadvantage in a legal contest with a corporation or rich opponent," because technicalities put a premium on expensive lawyers.

Now Mr. Hoover gives prominent place in his program of legal reforms to this measure, which for some twenty-two years, on and off, has been pending before Congress. The long delay epitomizes the slow progress of American court reforms. Mr. Hoover declares present rules of procedure in criminal appeals to federal circuit courts "lend themselves to delay and unnecessary expense." He points out the disgraceful condition under which convicted persons are now frequently permitted to go free for long periods of time pending appeal. A statutory code enacted by Congress to meet this situation would be too rigid, Mr. Hoover believes.

He has his own proposal:

"I suggest that the Supreme Court of the United States be authorized to prescribe uniform rules of practice and procedure in criminal cases for all proceedings after verdicts in the district courts and for the circuit courts of appeal, including the courts of the District of Columbia."

It is to be hoped that Congress will put Mr. Hoover's recommendation promptly into effect. It will give the federal courts control over their own procedure in criminal cases, as they now have it in equity cases. The Supreme Court has made a remarkable record in the prompt disposition of criminal cases brought before it, and there is every prospect that it would speed up trial of criminal cases in all the lesser federal courts if given the authority possessed today by the judiciary of all other English-speaking nations. The example of such a successful outcome in the federal courts would, of course, be of incalculable value to the respective state courts.

CARNEGIE'S VISION OF PEACE

Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler has said, "Andrew Carnegie had a great vision. It was a vision of the world at peace, in good order and in full international co-operation for the promotion of industry and commerce, for the advancement of knowledge and its constant application to meet the needs and aspirations of men and for the steady increase of human contentment, satisfaction and happiness. . . . Although we no longer eat our fellowmen, nor torture prisoners," said Mr. Carnegie, "nor sack cities, killing their inhabitants we still kill each other in war like barbarians. Only wild beasts," he added, "are excusable for doing that in this the twentieth century of the Christian era. For the crime of war is inherent, since it decides not in favor of the right but always of the strong."

"Surely no clearer or more forceful statement could be made as to the real meaning of war. Gloss it over as we may and often do, war remains a highly organized effort at killing men, at laying waste towns, villages, and fertile fields, at bombarding great cities and at destroying historic and artistic monuments of incomparable value and charm. The doctrine that men can neither be safe nor free in any other way is finding fewer followers each year."

FEDERAL EXPENSES

Statistics just released by the Census Bureau in Washington show that the cost of maintaining 48 State Governments in this country rose from $517,503,220 in 1917 to $2,290,270,059 in 1930, an increase of $1,772,766,839, or 342 per cent in 13 years.

The ordinary expenditures of the Government in Washington increased during the same years from $1,977,681,751 to $3,994,152,467, or approximately 80 per cent.

The cost of running our National Government is out of all reasonable proportion to the benefits therefrom accruing to the people; but in assessing the responsibility for the total load of taxation with which the country has come to be weighted down, a decent regard for fairness requires that the greater rapidly with which State and City expenditures have mounted in recent years be recognized. The latter sources of outlay and therefore of taxation, have been the chief offenders against the public purse.

Gazetteers

It isn't filling out the income tax reports that hurts. It's the shelling out that causes the agony.

Regardless of the finish of the campaign, the Chinese have shown the world that they can fight when they have to.

After having decried money as a thing of evil, Leon Trotsky is now occupied in gathering together all he can acquire from the sale of his books.

Abuse of the "radio," if it continues to multiply, will make that instrument of easy communication and delightful entertainment all that Al Smith called it.

This country is lamentably inclined toward the substitution of catch phrases for action. Let somebody invent a new slogan and the Nation is immediately saved.

MY NEW YORK

By JAMES ASWELL

NEW YORK. — Manhattan Tab-leau, Mid-town:
The hotels . . . Cluster of hotels, clinging together against the elusive wash of tourists and traveling men, as if hopeful of snaring some of the restless crowds . . . Memories of the old Broadway Central, where I stayed one night before shipping to Europe as a seaman, gaining the impression that New York was a town of girl mirrors and red plush and dark marble plumbing fixtures . . . Ten years too late . . .

The Astor, immense and stubborn monument to the glory of the early Nineteen Hundreds . . . The college boys standing in the entrance looking hungrily at the turbulent crowds and the most press-agented street in the world . . . The pretty women in the lobby; there are always pretty women in the lobby of the Astor, and of the Plaza . . .

Not far away, the Woodstock, where my parents stayed during a visit when I had my first cubby-hole apartment in Greenwich Village . . . And the Hermitage, which collected my final $2.50 the night the boat docked on Bremerhaven, and left me without a dime to eat or get back home . . . The Lincoln, a little way west, where I broadcast every Monday . . . The Piccadilly, where two artists and a writer I know took rooms to escape the pounding turmoil of the town and work—in the heart of the Rialto blaze! . . .

And that hotel a few blocks to the north, where a honeymooning couple I know stopped to find their room commanded a full view of a chorus dressing room and had to have the manager of the hotel call the theatre and tell the careless chorines to pull down their shades. And, going east, the high-hat Algonquin, whose manager, Frank, as I know more writers than anyone else in the world . . . It was to the Algonquin that I went, nervously, to discuss my first story for College Humor with H. N. Swanson, the "boy editor" (I was 21 and he was 25)—and the only thing I remember of the interview was that he said, "You put on your overcoat the same way Corey Ford does." And I said, "Thanks." And he replied, "Don't be sarcastic. I didn't mean anything."

The hotels . . . Sphinxes to collect memories . . . It's odd how all the books about New York by lovers of the town must concern themselves in great part with hotels, which are supposed to be for transients! . . .

LATE

Plays come and go so rapidly these days that even the best informed lose track. The other night a large limousine drew up in front of the Biltmore theatre, where "Zombi" has been running. Out of the tonneau emerged a tall-coated and evening-gowned party of six. One of the men was a commentator on Broadway doings of some local fame.

The professional man-about-town rushed toward the deserted box office, looking at his watch with a puzzled expression.

GRAB BAG

Why are Turkish towels so called?

How much wire is there in the four cables of the Brooklyn bridge.

When was the first carpet mill started in the United States?

Correctly Speaking—

"Much" should not be used for very. Say "My work is very different this year." Not "My work is much different this year."

Today's Anniversary

On this day, in 1862, the battle between the Monitor and the Merrimack took place.

Today's Horoscope

Persons born on this day are honest, genuine and frank.

Answers to Forgoing Questions

1. Turkish towels are so-called because the material from which they are made resembles a cloth of Turkish manufacture.

2. The total length of wire in the four cables unwrapped is 14,080 miles.

3. The first mill of this sort was started by William Peter Sprague in Philadelphia in 1791.

EASING THE STRAIN ON THE OARSMAN

NOTE AND COMMENT

In this column from day to day appear articles written by various individuals not on the staff or associated with this paper.

These articles are constructive in nature and are presented with the hope that they may give our readers a broader understanding on matters of interest, local, state, national and international.

A CITY FOURSQUARE

A community is a family enlarged many times. Its behavior, moreover, is much the same as a small group of persons who live under one roof. There are arguments and differences of opinion on questions that range from the ridiculous to the sublime. There are problems to be solved and policies to be established for constant and much-needed direction. Among a community's children are those who must occasionally be chastened or rebuked. Others need counsel and leadership if they are to guide the fragile bark safely to a port of contentment. Still others require material rather than spiritual or intellectual assistance, and here again it is the responsibility of all to assist in the tragedies of the unfortunate and helpless.

A city to be truly foursquare must have a material side, a spiritual side, a cultural side, and a recreational side. Here, as in its other phases, it is very similar to the family, and it bears much the same relationship to other surrounding communities that an individual and a family owes to its community. Selfishness, lack of sympathy, aloofness, isolation, should have no part in our modern community life. Progress will be made only through cooperation in all things for the common good.

APPRECIATION

In good and indifferent times there are always patriotic, unselfish individuals and groups who are working devotedly for the common good—those who are giving of themselves freely and fully that youth and those who are unfortunate or helpless may be served. In ordinary times this work goes along much unnoticed, notwithstanding the fact that the tragedies of life are always present. In times of unusual distress or of great disaster the work of human reclamation, and the giving of material assistance, sympathy and consolation stands out in such bold relief that all who run may read. A visit to the various agencies of relief now in active service is very illuminating and helps to renew one's faith in justice and in the finer traits of human life.

Budgets For The Entire Family

By MRS. MARY MORTON

CORRECT APPORTIONMENT

It is highly necessary that a young couple contemplating marriage should make a plan for their future finances. Figure on your probable income and then try to live close to that plan.

Remember this, the stingy person divides his income something like this: Savings, 60 per cent; living expenses, 37 per cent; education, 1 per cent; recreation, 1 per cent; charity, 1 per cent.

On the other hand, the extravagant person is apt to apportion his income thus: Savings, nothing; living expenses, 58 per cent; education, 1 per cent; recreation, 40 per cent; charity, 1 per cent.

The thrifty person, the one with the "long look ahead," figures this way: Savings, 20 per cent; living expenses, 50 per cent; education, recreation and charity, each 10 per cent.

Financial Terms Everyone Should Know

CHECKS: Checks on banking accounts according to Elwood Lloyd's "How to Finance Home Life," are so familiar that it is not necessary to describe them or their many uses. There are certain things about checks, however, that everyone should know. First, either cash or deposit all checks as soon as possible after receiving them. Holding a check often keeps the person who made it out from getting a proper balance of his account, and may also result in loss to the holder. In many cases checks lose their value at the time of the death of the person issuing them, and the holder would have no claim in case other checks had been made and presented during the time he was holding it.

In writing checks it is always advisable to make a notation on them, preferably in the lower left corner concerning the item for which they are payment. Such checks, when returned by the bank after having been paid, constitute the best kind of receipt because they are acceptable in court as direct evidence that the account has been paid.

Keep your checks for at least five years after they have been returned from the bank. They may be needed as evidence when least expected.

BONUS: In financial matters it generally means "something extra given to make the sale price attractive." For instance, a company will offer preferred stock at a certain price, and to make the price attractive to the purchaser will offer some of the common stock as a bonus.

Acid Condition Disturbs

By LOGAN CLENDENING, M. D.

One out of about every hundred letters from readers which come to this desk states the opinion of self-diagnosis of the writer that he or she has an acid condition of the body.

This common belief concerns one of the most complicated phenomena in the functions of the body. Our fluids are neutral—neither acid nor alkaline, or, to be exact, only very slightly alkaline—in health, and the body fights fiercely to preserve that neutrality. Even the slightest disturbance of the balance causes grave symptoms, and when the scales are considerably unbalanced it is almost impossible to restore them, and death rapidly ensues.

We have various ways of measuring the amount of acidity of the body fluids and of the accumulation of one form of reaction over another. These ways which have been devised are indeed extremely accurate. One is by measuring the carbon dioxide capacity of the blood plasma. As this is lowered it indicates a change from neutral to acid in the body fluids.

One of the things which causes such a change is lack of oxygen delivered to the cells in sufficient amounts. When this occurs an acid which is always formed from muscular activity—lactic acid—and which is normally burned by the oxygen in the tissues, accumulates. Thus in states of low blood pressure—below 70 systolic—there is a gradual lowering of the carbon dioxide capacity of the blood plasma and this gets worse as the blood pressure falls. In states of surgical shock the condition is so severe as to be probably the most important factor in the fatal outcome so frequent in such cases.

Acidosis of an entirely different type is that seen in diabetes. If sugar is so insufficiently burned in the body that there is not a coincident burning of fats, the fatty acids, which are incomplete stages of fat combustion, accumulate and this acidosis results in diabetic coma. It is a form which can probably be entirely disregarded in persons other than diabetics. For untune also, is the fact that our powers of treating it, by insulin, are now very effective.

The body guards its neutrality so jealously—even the change in the blood reaction from the normal pH 7.4 to pH 6.95, which is infinitesimally over the acid range, results in coma—and maintains so efficient an automatic set of devices to make the proper adjustments that it is difficult to say whether any actual disease pictures of an obscure nature are due to acidosis. Perhaps they are, and study along this line has possibilities of fruitfulness.

QUESTIONS FROM READERS

A. E. P.: "Will you please tell me something more about Vitamin E? Do all cereals contain it? Is Vitamin E destroyed by heat?"

Answer: Vitamin E is widely distributed in many food stuffs. It is, in fact, probably the most generally distributed vitamin of all. Lettuce, whole wheat, egg yolk and liver, have been particularly mentioned as foods in which it is found. Vitamin E is not very easily destroyed by heat.

Mother Makes Big Fuss

By MRS. VIRGINIA LEE

Most women declare they prefer their men to be the big, strong, he-man type. Men always are trying to live up to that idea of them to satisfy the "female of the species." Nothing worries a man person quite as much as to be thought as sissy.

He wrestles with this bugbear from his cradle to his grave. Women, however, are apt to be responsible for the very traits which they loudly condemn. They are the ones—the mothers—who make cry babies and sissies of their sons.

"Dear Virginia Lee: I should like your advice on this situation: When my father teases my little brother, who is 13, and makes him cry, or accidentally hurts him, my mother carries on something awful."

"She takes my brother's part, but instead of cheering him up and making him forget about it, she makes him feel that 'some day he'll be able to take his own part.' My brother does forget about it in a little while, but she doesn't. At noon, if it happened in the morning, she probably won't speak to him; father, who didn't mean a thing and is very good to my brother. I, her 18-year-old daughter, try to tell her that that is not the right way to do, but of course it is worse than before if I say a word."

"I am concerned for my brother, who is little and puny. What should I do? Am I right? Just A Co-Ed." Of course you are right, dear, but how to get your mother to see that she is making a spoiled baby out of your little brother is the problem.

I think your best plan is to be a real pal to your brother and, without intimating in any way that you think he cries and is hurt too easily, hold up to him as an ideal the type of person who takes razzing and rough play in good part and doesn't cry even if he is hurt. You can point out to him, if you think wise, that his tears make your mother feel bad and cause trouble between her and your father. Try to get him to co-operate in keeping the peace in the family.

And you can work out a program with your father in which he refrains from teasing your brother and treats him as a good pal—talking confidentially with him and interesting himself in the boy's friends and sports.

Maybe as the boy grows older his health will improve. Get him to read the life of Theodore Roosevelt and learn how he made a strong, healthy man of himself by following a certain program.

And good luck to you, little peace-maker!

R. B.: If you are interested as you say, in philosophy, spiritualism, numerology, etc., the very best thing you can do is to go to college and study and find out as much of the truth of these matters as you can. Have you finished school? If not, finish, and then go to college if you possibly can.

Troubled: Drop the boy friend if you no longer care to go with him. It isn't fair to him to keep on going with him, feeling as you do. As to the gifts, if he wants them back, I suppose you should give them to him, but in that case he should return those you have given him, if any.

How To Make Up Eyes

By GLADYS GLAD

It happened just before a matinee the other day. A little chorine stepped timidly into my dressing room.

"Gladys," she said, "would you do something for me?"

"Sure thing," I replied. "What is it?"

"Well," she said, "I'm such a dub about eye make-up. My eyes always look so messy when they're fully made up. And the other girls all say that you know better than anyone else how eyes should be made up."

So I was wondering whether you'd show me."

"Sit down," I told her. "I'm just about to put on my make-up for the show anyway, and you can watch—and learn."

I applied my rouge, lipstick and powder in the usual manner while she watched me carefully. Then I selected a finely-pointed eyebrow pencil from my make-up drawer, and drew a fine, thin line under each of my eyes, close to the lashes.

I carried the line about a quarter of an inch beyond the outer corner of each eye and with my fingertip, I carefully blended it.

Next, I put a bit of eyeshadow cream on the tip of my finger and applied it to my upper eyelids. I applied the cream more heavily next to the lashes, and blended it over the entire lids so that it shaded into almost no color at all.

Then I took a small, clean eyebrow brush, moistened it with a tiny bit of vaseline, and brushed my lashes with it. This, I explained to the little chorine, was to remove any tiny particles of powder from the hairs, and to provide a smooth surface for the application of my mascara.

After this brushing, I applied the mascara, brushing it onto the lashes from the roots to the tips. With a soft pencil, I faintly traced my eyebrows, in order to accent them.

As the final step, I brushed my brows and lashes again with the vaseline-moistened brush, in order to give them gloss.

This eye make-up is, of course, primarily for stage wear. But the lay woman may follow the same procedure when making up her eyes. The only difference is that she must apply the various cosmetics much more sparingly. For it she makes up her eyes too heavily, the total effect will be one of artificiality.

BIBLE THOUGHT FOR TODAY

Shall mortal man be more just than God? shall a man be more pure than his maker?—Job, iv, 17.

SPEEDING JUSTICE

One of the most important of President Hoover's proposals in his special message on the administration of justice is that urging the grant of the so-called "rule-making power" to the federal courts. Much criticism is directed against courts for alleged dilatory tactics and failure to cut through the red tape of technicalities, which in fact is unjustified. Most state courts are not masters in their own houses. Procedure, in most cases, is not regulated by the judges, but by the lawmakers.

For years a campaign has gone on within bench and bar to permit the courts to assume responsibility in a situation where if faults develop they are the ones blamed. Laymen, generally, do not understand the importance of the issue. In many state courts, judges are governed by a rigid code of procedure prescribed by the Legislature, so minute and inflexible that it often gives rise to an appeal by lawyers to technicalities, rather than to the rights and wrongs of a case.

The American Bar Association had led a campaign to give the federal courts, through the Supreme Court, "the rule-making power." President Coolidge backed the plan. Mr. Taft, both as President and Chief Justice vigorously endorsed it. "I am strongly convinced that the best method of improving judicial procedure at law is to empower the Supreme Court to do it through the medium of the rules of the court, as in equity," he said on one occasion. Under the present system, he declared, "the poor man is at a woeful disadvantage in a legal contest with a corporation or rich opponent," because technicalities put a premium on expensive lawyers.

Now Mr. Hoover gives prominent place in his program of legal reforms to this measure, which for some twenty-two years, on and off, has been pending before Congress. The long delay epitomizes the slow progress of American court reforms. Mr. Hoover declares present rules of procedure in criminal appeals to federal circuit courts "lend themselves to delay and unnecessary expense." He points out the disgraceful condition under which convicted persons are now frequently permitted to go free for long periods of time pending appeal. A statutory code enacted by Congress to meet this situation would be too rigid, Mr. Hoover believes.

He has his own proposal:

"I suggest that the Supreme Court of the United States be authorized to prescribe uniform rules of practice and procedure in criminal cases for all proceedings after verdicts in the district courts and for the circuit courts of appeal, including the courts of the District of Columbia."

It is to be hoped that Congress will put Mr. Hoover's recommendation promptly into effect. It will give the federal courts control over their own procedure in criminal cases, as they now have it in equity cases. The Supreme Court has made a remarkable record in the prompt disposition of criminal cases brought before it, and there is every prospect that it would speed up trial of criminal cases in all the lesser federal courts if given the authority possessed today by the judiciary of all other English-speaking nations. The example of such a successful outcome in the federal courts would, of course, be of incalculable value to the respective state courts.

CARNEGIE'S VISION OF PEACE

Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler has said, "Andrew Carnegie had a great vision. It was a vision of the world at peace, in good order and in fullest international co-operation for the promotion of industry and commerce, for the advancement of knowledge and its constant application to meet the needs and aspirations of men and for the steady increase of human contentment, satisfaction and happiness. . . . Although we no longer eat our fellowmen, nor torture prisoners," said Mr. Carnegie, "nor sack cities, killing their inhabitants we still kill each other in war like barbarians. Only wild beasts," he added, "are excusable for doing that in this twentieth century of the Christian era. For the crime of war is inherent, since it decides not in favor of the right but always of the strong."

"Surely no clearer or more forceful statement could be made as to the real meaning of war. Gloss it over as we may and often do, war remains a highly organized effort at killing men, at laying waste towns, villages, and fertile fields, at bombarding great cities and at destroying historic and artistic monuments of incomparable value and charm. The doctrine that men can neither be safe nor free in any other way is finding fewer followers each year."

FEDERAL EXPENSES

Statistics just released by the Census Bureau in Washington show that the cost of maintaining 48 State Governments in this country rose from $517,503,220 in 1917 to $2,290,270,059 in 1930, an increase of $1,772,766,839, or 342 per cent in 13 years.

The ordinary expenditures of the Government in Washington increased during the same years from $1,977,681,751 to $3,994,152,467, or approximately 80 per cent.

The cost of running our National Government is out of all reasonable proportion to the benefits therefrom accruing to the people; but in assessing the responsibility for the total load of taxation with which the country has come to be weighted down, a decent regard for fairness requires that the greater rapidly with which State and City expenditures have mounted in recent years be recognized. The latter sources of outlay and therefore of taxation, have been the chief offenders against the public purse.

Gazetteers

It isn't filling out the income tax reports that hurts. It's the shelling out that causes the agony.

MY NEW YORK

By JAMES ASWELL

NEW YORK. — Manhattan Tableau, Mid-town: The hotels . . . Cluster of hotels, clinging together against the eusive wash of tourists and traveling men, as if hopeful of snaring some of the restless crowds . . .

Memories of the old Broadway Central, where I stayed one night before shipping to Europe as a wellhop, gaining the impression that New York was a town of girl mirrors and red plush and dark marble plumbing fixtures . . . Ten years too late . . .

The Astor, immense and stubborn monument to the glory of the early Nineteen Hundreds . . . The college boys standing in the entrance looking hungrily at the turbulent crowds and the most press-agented street in the world . . . The pretty women in the lobby; there are always pretty women in the lobby of the Astor, and of the Plaza . . .

Not far away, the Woodstock, where my parents stayed during a visit when I had my first cubby-hole apartment in Greenwich Village . . . And the Hermitage, which collected my final $2.50 the night the boat docked from Bremerhaven, and left me without a dime to eat or get back home . . . The Lincoln, a little way west, where I broadcast every Monday . . . The Piccadilly, where two artists and a writer I know took rooms to escape the pounding turmoil of the town and work—in the heart of the Rialto blaze! . . .

And that hotel a few blocks to the north, where a honeymooning couple I know stopped to find their room commanded a full view of a chorus dressing room and had to have the manager of the hotel call the theatre and tell the careless chorines to pull down their shades . . .

And, going east, the high-alt Algonquin, whose manager, Frank, as he knows more writers than anyone else in the world . . . It was to the Algonquin that I went, nervously, to discuss my first story for College Humor with H. N. Swanson, the "boy editor" (I was 21 and he was 25)—and the only thing I remember of the interview was that he said, "You put on your overcoat the same way Corey Ford does" . . . And I said, "Thanks" . . . And he replied, "Don't be sarcastic. I didn't mean anything" . . .

The hotels . . . Sphinxes to collect memories . . . It's odd how all the books about New York by lovers of the town must concern themselves in great part with hotels, which are supposed to be for transients! . . .

LATE

Plays come and go so rapidly these days that even the best informed lose track. The other night a large limousine drew up in front of the Biltmore theatre, where "Zombie" has been running. Out of the tonneau emerged a tall-coated and evening-gowned party of six. One of the men was a commentator on Broadway doings of some local fame.

The professional man-about-town rushed toward the deserted box office, looking at his watch with a puzzled expression.

Why are Turkish towels so-called?

How much wire is there in the four cables of the Brooklyn bridge?

When was the first carpet mill started in the United States?

Correctly Speaking—
"Much" should not be used for very. Say "My work is very different this year." Not "My work is much different this year."

Today's Anniversary
On this day, in 1862, the battle between the Monitor and the Merrimack took place.

Today's Horoscope
Persons born on this day are honest, genuine and frank.

Answers to Foregoing Questions
1. Turkish towels are so-called because the material from which they are made resembles a cloth of Turkish manufacture.
2. The total length of wire in the four cables unwrapped is 14,080 miles.
3. The first mill of this sort was started by William Peter Sprague in Philadelphia in 1791.

EASING THE STRAIN ON THE OARSMAN

NOTE AND COMMENT

In this column from day to day appear articles written by various individuals not on the staff or associated with this paper.

These articles are constructive in nature and are presented with the hope that they may give our readers a broader understanding on matters of interest, local, state, national and international.

A CITY FOURSQUARE

A community is a family enlarged many times. Its behavior, moreover, is much the same as a small group of persons who live under one roof. There are arguments and differences of opinion on questions that range from the ridiculous to the sublime. There are problems to be solved and policies to be established for constant and much-needed direction. Among a community's children are those who must occasionally be chastened or rebuked. Others need counsel and leadership if they are to guide the fragile bark safely to a port of contentment. Still others require material rather than spiritual or intellectual assistance, and here again it is the responsibility of all to assist in the tragedies of the unfortunate and helpless.

A city to be truly foursquare must have a material side, a spiritual side, a cultural side, and a recreational side. Here, as in its other phases, it is very similar to the family, and it bears much the same relationship to other surrounding communities that an individual and a family owes to its community. Selfishness, lack of sympathy, aloofness, isolation, should have no part in our modern community life. Progress will be made only through cooperation in all things for the common good.

APPRECIATION

In good, bad and indifferent times there are always patriotic, unselfish individuals and groups who are working devotedly for the common good—those who are giving of themselves freely and fully that youth and those who are unfortunate or helpless may be served. In ordinary times this work goes along much unnoticed, notwithstanding the fact that the tragedies of life are always present. In times of unusual distress or of great disaster the work of human reclamation, and the giving of material assistance, sympathy and consolation, stands out in such bold relief that all who run may read. A visit to the various agencies of relief now in active service is very illuminating and helps to renew one's faith in justice and in the finer traits of human life.

Budgets For The Entire Family

By MRS. MARY MORTON

CORRECT APPORTIONMENT

It is highly necessary that a young couple contemplating marriage should make a plan for their future finances. Figure on their probable income and then try to live close to that plan.

Remember this, the stingy person divides his income something like this: Savings, 60 per cent; living expenses, 37 per cent; education, 1 per cent; recreation 1 per cent; charity, 1 per cent.

On the other hand, the extravagant person is apt to apportion his income thus: Savings, nothing; living expenses, 58 per cent; education, 1 per cent; recreation, 40 per cent; charity, 1 per cent.

The thrifty person, the one with the "long look ahead," figures this way: Savings, 20 per cent; living expenses, 50 per cent; education, recreation and charity, each 10 per cent.

Financial Terms Everyone Should Know

CHECKS: Checks on banking accounts, according to Elwood Lloyd's "How to Finance Home Life," are so familiar that it is not necessary to describe them or their many uses. There are certain things about checks, however, that everyone should know. First, either cash or deposit all checks as soon as possible after receiving them. Holding a check often keeps the person who made it out from getting a proper balance of his account, and may also result in loss to the holder. In many cases checks lose their value at the time of the death of the person issuing them, and the holder would have no claim in case other checks had been made and presented during the time he was holding it.

In writing checks it is always advisable to make a notation on them, preferably in the lower left corner, concerning the item for which they are payment. Such checks, when returned by the bank after having been paid, constitute the best kind of receipt because they are acceptable in court as direct evidence that the account has been paid.

Keep your checks for at least five years after they have been returned from the bank. They may be needed as evidence when least expected.

BONUS: In financial matters it generally means "something extra given to make the sale price attractive." For instance, a company will offer preferred stock at a certain price, and to make the price attractive to the purchaser will offer some of the common stock as a bonus.

Acid Condition Disturbs

By LOGAN CLENDENING, M. D.

One out of every hundred letters from readers which come to this desk states the opinion of self-diagnosis of the writer that he or she has an acid condition of the body.

This common belief concerns one of the most complicated phenomena in the functions of the body. Our fluids are neutral—neither acid nor alkaline, or, to be exact, only very slightly alkaline—in health, and the body fights fiercely to preserve that neutrality. Even the slightest disturbance of the balance causes grave symptoms, and when the scales are considerably unbalanced it is almost impossible to restore them, and death rapidly ensues.

We have various ways of measuring the amount of acidity of the body fluids and of the accumulation of one form of reaction over another. These ways which have been devised are indeed extremely accurate. One is by measuring the carbon dioxide capacity of the blood plasma. As this is lowered it indicates a change from neutral to acid in the body fluids.

One of the things which causes such a change is lack of oxygen delivered to the cells in sufficient amounts. When this occurs an acid which is always formed from muscular activity—lactic acid—and which is normally burned by the oxygen in the tissues, accumulates. Thus in states of low blood pressure—below 70 systolic—there is a gradual lowering of the carbon dioxide capacity of the blood plasma and this gets worse as the blood pressure falls. In states of surgical shock the condition is so severe as to be probably the most important factor in the fatal outcome so frequent in such cases.

Acidosis of an entirely different type is that seen in diabetes. If sugar is so insufficiently burned in the body that there is not a coincident burning of fats, the fatty acids, which are incomplete stages of fat combustion, accumulate and this acidosis results in diabetic coma. It is a form which can probably be entirely disregarded in persons other than diabetics. Fortunately, it is the fact that our powers of treating it, by insulin, are now very effective.

The body guards its neutrality so jealously—even the change in the blood reaction from the normal pH 7.4 to pH 6.95, which is infinitesimally over the acid range, results in coma—and maintains so efficient an automatic set of devices to make the proper adjustments that it is difficult to say whether any actual disease pictures of an obscure nature are due to acidosis. Perhaps they are, and study along this line has possibilities of fruitfulness.

QUESTIONS FROM READERS

A. E. P.: "Will you please tell me something more about Vitamin E? Do all cereals contain it? Is Vitamin E destroyed by heat?"

Answer: Vitamin E is widely distributed in many food stuffs. It is in fact, probably the most generally distributed vitamin of all. Lettuce, whole wheat, egg yolk and liver, have been particularly mentioned as foods in which it is found. Vitamin E is not very easily destroyed by heat.

Mother Makes Big Fuss

By MRS. VIRGINIA LEE

Most women declare they prefer their men to be the big, strong, he-man type. Men always are trying to live up to that idea of them to satisfy the "female of the species."

Nothing worries a man person quite as much as to be thought as sissy. He wrestles with this bugbear from his cradle to his grave.

Women, however, are apt to be responsible for the very traits which they loudly condemn. They are the ones—the mothers—who make cry babies and sissies of their sons.

"Dear Virginia Lee: I should like your advice on this situation: When my father teases my little brother, who is 13, and makes him cry, or accidentally hurts him, my mother carries on something awful."

"She takes my brother's part, but instead of cheering him up and making him forget about it, she weeps and tells him that 'some day he'll be able to take his own part.' My brother does forget about it in a little while, but she doesn't. At noon, if it happened in the morning, she probably won't speak to my father, who didn't mean a thing and is very good to my brother. I, her 18-year-old daughter, try to tell her that that is not the right way to do, but of course it is worse than before if I say a word."

"I am concerned for my brother, who is little and puny. What should I do? Am I right? Just A Co-Ed."

Of course you are right, dear, but how to get your mother to see that she is making a spoiled baby out of your little brother is the problem.

I think your best plan is to be a real pal to your brother and, without intimating in any way that you think he cries and is hurt too easily, hold up to him as an ideal the type of person who takes razzing and rough play in good part and doesn't cry even if he is hurt. You can point out to him, if you think wise, that his tears make your mother feel bad and cause trouble between her and your father. Try to get him to co-operate in keeping the peace in the family.

And you can work out a program with your father in which he refrains from teasing your brother and treats him as a good pal—talking confidentially with him and interesting himself in the boy's friends and sports.

Maybe as the boy grows older his health will improve. Get him to read the life of Theodore Roosevelt and learn how he made a strong, healthy man of himself by following a certain program.

And good luck to you, little peace-maker!

R. B.: If you are interested as you say, in philosophy, spiritualism, numerology, etc., the very best thing you can do is to go to college and study and find out as much of the truth of these matters as you can. Have you finished school? If not, finish, and then go to college if you possibly can.

Troubled: Drop the boy friend if you no longer care to go with him. It isn't fair to him to keep on going with him, feeling as you do. As to the gifts, if he wants them back, I suppose you should give them to him, but in that case he should return those you have given him, if any.

How To Make Up Eyes

By GLADYS GLAD

It happened just before a matinee the other day. A little chortle stepped timidly into my dressing room.

"Gladys," she said, "would you do something for me?"

"Sure thing," I replied. "What is it?"

"Well," she said, "I'm such a dub about eye make-up. My eyes always look so messy when I'm made up. And the other girls all say that you know better than anyone else how eyes should be made up. So I was wondering whether you'd show me."

"Sit down," I told her. "I'm just about to put on my make-up for the show anyway, and you can watch—and learn."

I applied my rouge, lipstick and powder in the usual manner while she watched me carefully. Then I selected a finely-pointed eyebrow pencil from my make-up drawer, and drew a fine, thin line under each of my eyes, close to the lashes. I carried the line about a quarter of an inch beyond the outer corner of each eye and then, with my fingertip, I carefully blended it.

Next, I put a bit of eyeshadow cream on the tip of my finger and applied it to my upper eyelids. I applied the cream more heavily next to the lashes, and blended it over the entire lids so that it shaded into almost no color at all.

Then I took a small, clean eyebrow brush, moistened it with a tiny bit of vaseline, and brushed my lashes with it. This, I explained to the little chortle, was to remove any tiny particles of powder from the hairs, and to provide a smooth surface for the application of my mascara.

After this brushing, I applied the mascara, brushing it onto the lashes from the roots to the tips. With a soft pencil, I faintly traced my eyebrows, in order to accent them.

As the final step, I brushed my brows and lashes again with the vaseline-moistened brush, in order to give them gloss.

This eye make-up is, of course, primarily for stage wear. But the lay woman may follow the same procedure when making up her eyes. The only difference is that she must apply the vaseline and cosmetics much more sparingly. For it makes up her eyes too heavily, the total effect will be one of artificiality.

SPORT SNAP SHOTS

FRAMED

Barring the remote possibility it might be exhumed for a post-season game with Ross High, the current Xenia Central basketball campaign may be considered finished.

The Buccaneers gave themselves up Friday night. They were banished from the sectional Class A state basketball tournament in the first round, losing to Troy, 33 to 21.

It was too bad Xenia had to be eliminated by this particular school. The defeat broke a string of ten straight victories over Troyan quintets extending back to the 1923-24 season. Annually since that season Xenia had beaten Troy and in the 1927-28 season the Trojans were licked twice, once during the season and once in the state tournament.

Xenia ended its season with a record of five games won and eleven lost, accumulating a grand total of 292 points as compared with 355 for opponents. Following is the complete record of games won and lost:

Xenia 11, Waynesville 9.
Xenia 5, Wilmington 21.
Xenia 19, Alumni 16.
Xenia 19, Columbus West 21.
Xenia 16, Cincinnati Withrow 18.
Xenia 11, Sidney 24.
Xenia 15, Dayton Roosevelt 20.
Xenia 27, Troy 25.
Xenia 20, Miami Springs 30.
Xenia 17, Eaton 27.
Xenia 14, Dayton Stivers 39.
Xenia 25, Dayton Fairview 13.
Xenia 17, Greenville 22.
Xenia 14, Springfield 33.
Xenia 41, Piqua 33.
Xenia 21, Troy 33.

Scoring exactly 100 points, Freddie Dalton, forward and only a junior, was high individual scorer on the Buccaneer basketball squad. He averaged nearly seven points for the fifteen games in which he played. "Mo" Hyman was runner-up with fifty-seven points, followed by Howard Thompson with fifty-three and Jimmie Ralls with forty-two. Individual scoring was as follows:

Player	G.	F.	P.
Dalton	40	20	100
Hyman	23	11	57
Thompson	19	15	53
Ralls	17	8	42
Baldner	11	3	25
Smith	3	1	7
Luttrell	2	1	6
Creamer	0	1	1
Confer	0	1	1
Short	0	1	1

Minus the Southern drill and coat of tan he had expected to acquire during his sojourn down there, Harold Parrett, often not called "Polly," is back in our midst, after completing his spring training for the softball season at St. Petersburg, Fla. "Polly" watched the Boston Braves and New York Yankees in spring training, saw Babe Ruth smile a ball to the balcony of a fourth-story building, took a ride in a dirigible, and sent back postcards, darn it.

It is probable that neither Xenia nor Troy cared much about winning its first round state tournament game at Springfield Friday night. To the winner belonged the dubious honor of making another jaunt back to that city Saturday night in order to assist Springfield's advance to the district semifinals at Dayton. Show us the basketball team that likes to be a stepping stone and this department promises to fold up its typewriter for good. The search for such a team may now be considered on.

Greene Countians Out
Of Tournament
Picture

Greene County's three surviving entrants in sectional Class B basketball tournaments at Wilmington and Springfield were eliminated Saturday afternoon and evening. Jefferson Twp. of Bowersville and Ross Twp., winner and runner-up in the recent Greene County tournament, faded out of the tournament picture at the Wilmington College sectional, while Osborn Bath High, after winning its first game, was beaten in the semi-finals at Springfield.

Jefferson and Ross were defeated by Clinton County's two teams which emerged winners at the Wilmington sectional and gained the right to compete in the Dayton district finals this week-end.

Jefferson, which drew a bye the first round, lost to Jefferson Twp. perennial champions of Clinton County, 21 to 17 in an exciting second round contest. Ross Twp., which had won an impressive first round triumph Friday night, suffered a reversal of form and was soundly trounced by Wayne Twp., 24 to 14, Saturday. Wayne Twp. was runner-up in the Clinton County tournament.

After drawing a first round bye, Osborn Bath High won its way to the Class B semi-finals at Springfield by defeating Urbana Twp., runner-up from Champaign County, 25 to 15, and was then eliminated by Lawrenceville, of Clark County, 33 to 20, Lineups:

Baby Lindy's Nurse

First to discover the disappearance of Charles Lindbergh, Jr., was his nurse, Miss Betty Gow (above). The girl has been employed as the baby's nurse for a year.

SHERLOCK, JR.

NEW YORK, March 7.—With forty cents in his pocket and unshaken faith in his detective skill, David Adams, 11, Brooklyn, today was believed to be near Hopewell N. J., pursuing a lone search for the kidnapped Lindbergh baby. His father, Frank Adams, said David was missing from home since Thursday. The boy, a great admirer of Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh, was deeply affected by news of the child's abduction. "I'd like to go find that kid," David told his father. "If I found him, I'd be famous." Adams asked state troopers of New Jersey to look for his son.

CENTRAL JUNIORS VICTORS IN TOURNEY STAGED AT ARCANUM

Seeking additional laurels on the hardwoods, Xenia Central's junior high basketball quintet, winner of a recent junior tournament at Leesburg, won its first round contest Saturday afternoon in the annual junior high tourney sponsored by the Butler consolidated school at Arcanum, O.

Central juniors survived the first round by eliminating McCartyville Juniors of Shelby County, 21 to 13, and advanced to the quarter finals.

The next opponent for the Xenia quintet will be Franklin, which beat Jackson, 14 to 8, in the

GREENE COUNTY WINNER IN FOUL SHOOTING

Exhibiting his customary accuracy at the seventeen-foot line, Herbert Cummings, sophomore foul shooting sensation from Ross Twp. High School, sank thirty-seven out of forty throws to earn a tie for first place with a Port William player in the annual free throw contest held in conjunction with the sectional Class B basketball tournament at Wilmington College Saturday.

Cummings, winner of the foul shooting contest at the recent Greene County tourney, gained the right to compete in the Southwest Ohio district finals at Dayton this week-end. Stephens, of Port William, who also shot thirty-seven out of forty will also compete again in the district finals.

The free throw contest at Dayton will probably take place Saturday morning, the winner going to Columbus to take part in the state finals.

Ten foul shooting representatives, two from each of five counties, participated in the sectional contest at Wilmington. Robert Smith, sophomore of Springfield High School, who was runner-up to Cummings in the Greene County contest and was this county's other representative at Wilmington, placed fifth, sinking thirty-three out of forty throws. In addition to the first place tie, there was also a tie for second place, two players collecting thirty-four out of forty throws.

Signing to Fight Corbett

AFTER PLANS to fight Peter Jackson in San Francisco, Cal., fell through because the state banned boxing following a ring fatality, John L. Sullivan, 1892, signed to meet the Frisco bank clerk. The fighters agreed to fight with gloves for $10,000 a side in New Orleans, La., sometime during September, 1892. Sullivan's heavyweight championship was to be at stake.

John L. in Workout

THE OLYMPIC CLUB, sponsor of the bout, immediately planned an all-star card. Jack McAuliffe, first world light heavyweight champion, was booked to meet Billy Myers and George Dixon, featherweight champion, was signed to meet Jack Skelly as preliminaries. Meanwhile, Sullivan began training on Long Island. The old champion worked earnestly to get into shape for his title defense.

CHARLES M. RIDGWAY VICTIM OF FUMES FROM AUTO EARLY MONDAY

Charles M. Ridgway, about 64, of 133 W. Market St., retired drug-gist, had a narrow escape from death by asphyxiation from carbon monoxide fumes in the garage at the rear of his home Monday morning.

Ridgway had gone to the garage to start his automobile, thinking the radiator might have frozen due to the extreme cold weather. Later his wife, anxious over his prolonged absence, discovered him unconscious, lying on the garage floor.

The attending physician said there is a possibility pneumonia may develop.

HOWLEY IS OPTIMISTIC

Dapper Dan Says His Cincinnati Club Will Be Much Better Aggregation

By JAMES L. KILGALLEN

TAMPA, Fla., March 7.—Manager Dan Howley of the Cincinnati Reds is confident his ball club will not finish in the cellar this season. He pointed out to International News Service today that last year he had only one pinch hitter—"Red" Lucas, a pitcher. This year, however, he has five: Andy High, George Grantham, Harvey Hendrick, Harry Heilmann and Lucas. "We couldn't hit last year," declared Howley as he stood back of first base and watched his athletes work out. "We lost a flock of games by one run because we had no one to pinch hit when Lucas was out of the game. But this year we've got reserve strength and we ought to make a showing."

Although he has four hold-outs, including Second Baseman Cuccinello, Manager Howley is not worrying. He believes they will sign.

Manager Howley plans to add considerable hitting power to the Reds line-up this season. He has three hard-hitting first basemen, Mickey Heath, a left hander, Grantham and Hendrick. Last year Hendrick was one of the five leading hitters of the league almost all season. But Heath, who was out last year with rheumatic fever, is ready for a big year and he can outfield Hendrick. Grantham can play first or second.

Cuccinello will play second according to Howley, and either Leo Durocher or Joe Morrissey, purchased from St. Paul, will be in at short. Joe Stripp will guard third, with little Andy High ready for any emergency work at the hot corner. High is a great pinch-hitter.

The outfield will be composed of Crabtree in left, Douthitt in center and either Heilmann or Wally Roettger in right. In Howley's opinion Crabtree is one of the greatest outfielders in the game. Douthitt is conceded to be about the best ball hawk in the league. Heilmann was out all last year with arthritis which settled in his wrist but he looks all right again.

Sukeforth, Ashjornson and Clyde Manion will do the "catching. Manion, a veteran big leaguer, was drafted during the winter from Milwaukee.

Howley said his starting pitchers will be Lucas, St. Johnsen, Larry

ALL GREENE COUNTY TEAMS ELIMINATED FROM TOURNEY PLAY

Eight Class A quintets and eight Class B teams, survivors of various sectional tournaments, over the weekend, will assemble at the Dayton fairgrounds coliseum Friday to participate in the Southwestern Ohio district finals. One representative from each class will go to the state finals at Columbus a week hence.

Springfield and Greenville, survivors of the Springfield sectional; Hamilton, Cincinnati Norwood, Cincinnati Roger Bacon, and Wilmington, winners at the Cincinnati regional and Stivers and Chamblaine, winners at Dayton, will be the Class A participants.

The Class B group will embrace Jefferson Twp. and Wayne Twp. from Clinton County; Westville and Lawrenceville from the Springfield sectional; West Chester and St. Bernard from the Cincinnati regional; Dayton Fairmont and Jackson Twp. from Dayton's sectional. Drawings for the first round of play in the district competition will be conducted at 7 o'clock Monday night in the office of the city recreation director at Dayton. Question of "seeding" the strongest entrants may be considered.

Barring the remote possibility it might be exhumed for a post-season game with Ross High, the current Xenia Central basketball campaign may be considered finished.

The Buccaneers gave themselves up Friday night. They were banished from the sectional Class A state basketball tournament in the first round, losing to Troy, 33 to 21.

It was too bad Xenia had to be eliminated by this particular school. The defeat broke a string of ten straight victories over Trojan quintets extending back to the 1923-24 season. Annually since that season Xenia had beaten Troy and in the 1927-28 season Troyans were linked twice, once during the season and once in the state tournament.

Xenia ended its season with a record of five games won and eleven lost, accumulating a grand total of 292 points as compared with 385 for opponents. Following is the complete record of games won and lost:

Xenia 11, Wayneville 9.
Xenia 15, Alumnus 21.
Xenia 19, Columbus West 21.
Xenia 16, Cincinnati Withrow 18.
Xenia 11, Sidney 24.
Xenia 15, Dayton Roosevelt 20.
Xenia 20, Miami Springs 30.
Xenia 17, Eaton 27.
Xenia 14, Dayton Stivers 39.
Xenia 25, Dayton Fairview 13.
Xenia 17, Greenville 22.
Xenia 14, Springfield 33.
Xenia 41, Plain 33.
Xenia 21, Troy 33.

Scoring exactly 100 points, Freddie Dalton, forward and only a junior, was high individual scorer on the Buccaneer basketball squad. He averaged nearly seven points for the fifteen games in which he played. "Mo" Hyman was runner-up with fifty-seven points, followed by Howard Thompson with fifty-three and Jimmie Ralls with forty-two. Individual scoring was as follows:

Player	G.	F.	P.
Dalton	40	20	100
Hyman	23	11	57
Thompson	19	15	53
Ralls	17	8	42
Baldner	11	3	25
Smith	3	1	7
Luttrell	2	1	6
Creamer	0	1	1
Confer	0	1	1

Minus the Southern drawl and coat of tan he had expected to acquire during his sojourn down there, Harold Parrett, often as not called "Polly," is back in our midst, after completing his spring training for the softball season at St. Petersburg, Fla. "Polly" watched the Boston Braves and New York Yankees in spring training, saw Babe Ruth smile at him from the balcony of a fourth-story building, took a ride in a dirigible, and sent back postcards, darn it.

It is probable that neither Xenia nor Troy cared much about winning its first round state tournament game at Springfield Friday night. To the winner belonged the dubious honor of making another jaunt back to that city Saturday night in order to assist Springfield's advance to the district semi-finals at Dayton. Show us the basketball team that likes to be a stepping stone and this department promises to fold up its typewriter for good. The search for such a team may now be considered on.

The free throw contest at Dayton will probably take place Saturday morning, the winner going to Columbus to take part in the state finals.

Ten foul shooting representatives, two from each of five counties, participated in the sectional contest at Wilmington.

Robert Smith, sophomore of Springfield High School, who was runner-up in Cummings' foul shooting contest and was this county's other representative at Wilmington, placed fifth, sinking thirty-three out of forty throws. In addition to the first place tie, there was also a tie for second place, two players collecting thirty-four out of forty throws.

"We couldn't hit last year," declared Howley as he stood back of first base and watched his athletes work out. "We lost a flock of games by one run because we had no one to pinch hit when Lucas was out of the game. But this year we've got reserve strength and we ought to make a showing."

Although he has four hold-outs, including Second Baseman Cuccinello, Manager Howley is not worrying. He believes they will sign. Manager Howley plans to add considerable hitting power to the Reds line-up this season. He has three hard-hitting first basemen, Mickey Heath, a left hander, Grantham and Hendrick. Last year Hendrick was one of the five leading hitters of the league almost all season. But Heath, who was out last year with rheumatic fever, is ready for a big year and he can out-field Hendrick. Grantham can play first or second.

Cuccinello will play second, according to Howley, and either Leo Durocher or Joe Morrissey, purchased from St. Paul, will be in at short. Joe Stripp will guard third with little Andy High ready for any emergency work at the hot corner. High is a great pinch-hitter.

The outfield will be composed of Crabtree in left, Douthitt in center and either Heilmann or Vally Roettger in right. In Howley's opinion Crabtree is one of the greatest outfielders in the game. Douthitt is conceded to be about the best ball hawk in the league. Heilmann was out all last year with arthritis which settled in his wrist but he looks all right again.

Rukeforth, Ashbjornson and Clyde Manion will do the catching. Manion, a veteran big leaguer, was drafted during the winter from Milwaukee.

Howley said his starting pitchers will be Lucas, St. Johnson, Larry

ALL GREENE COUNTY
TEAMS ELIMINATED
FROM TOURNEY PLAY

Eight Class A quintets and eight Class B teams, survivors of various sectional tournaments, over the weekend, will assemble at the Dayton fairgrounds coliseum Friday to participate in the Southwestern Ohio district finals. One representative from each class will go to the state finals at Columbus a week hence.

Springfield and Greenville, survivors of the Springfield sectional; Hamilton, Cincinnati, Norwood, Cincinnati Roger Bacon, and Wilmington, winners at the Cincinnati regional, and Stivers and Chaminade, winners at Dayton, will be the Class A participants.

The Class B group will embrace Jefferson Twp. and Wayne Twp. from Clinton County; Westville and Lawrenceville from the Springfield sectional; West Chester and St. Bernard from the Cincinnati regional; Dayton Fairmount and Jackson Twp. from Dayton's met.

Drawings for the first round of play in the district competition will be conducted at 7 o'clock Monday night in the office of the city recreation director at Dayton. Question of "seeding" the strongest entrants may be considered.

Betting on the Battle

AT 5 O'CLOCK the day of the fight—Sept. 7, 1892—the streets of New Orleans were so filled with fight fans that traffic could not move. The Olympic club, site of the bout, was already jammed with spectators. Throughout the city the sports were betting on the outcome with John L. ranking a four-to-one favorite over Corbett, who wasn't rated highly by the fans.

REV. LUNSFORD HAS RESIGNED BAPTIST CHURCH PASTORATE The Rev. Joel R. Lunsford, pastor of the First Baptist Church here four and one half years, presented his resignation to the congregation at the morning services Sunday. It will be officially acted upon at a business meeting of the church Wednesday night.

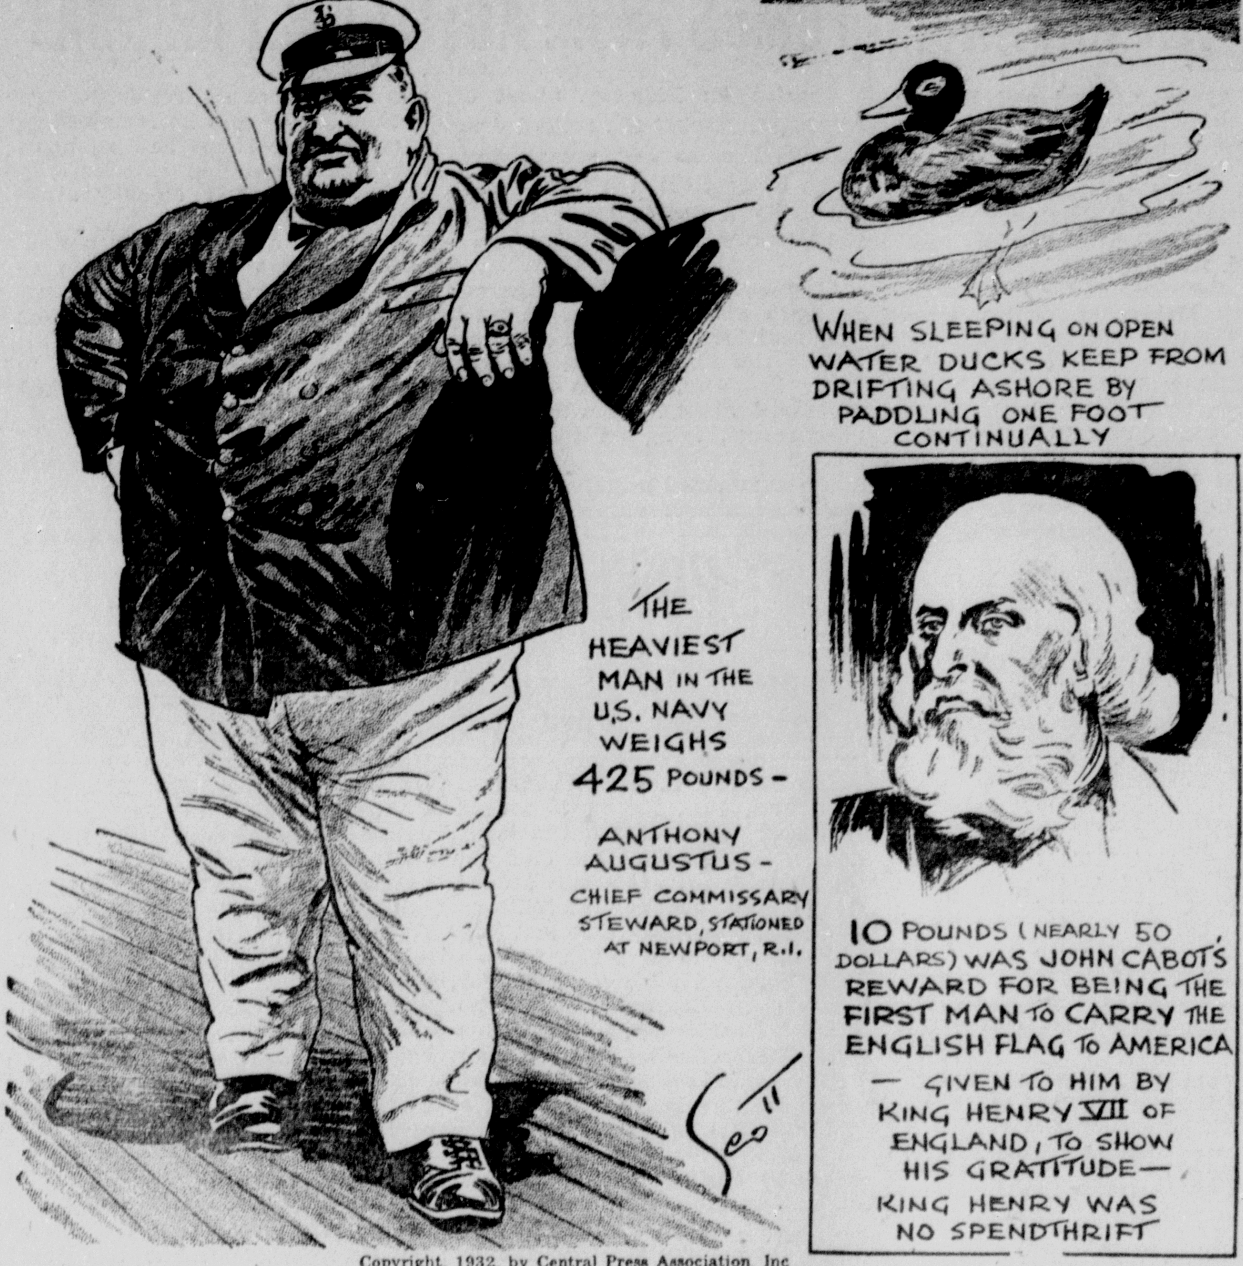

The Rev. Mr. Lunsford has been connected with the Inter-Southern Life Insurance Co., while here and upon leaving Xenia will become joint supervisor of the Inter-Southern and Missouri State Life Insurance Co., with offices in Cincinnati. Although he will have no regular preaching charge the minister expects to fill a pulpit in the Cincinnati vicinity every Sunday.

The Rev. and Mrs. Lunsford and family came to Xenia in December, 1927 from Cincinnati, where the Rev. Mr. Lunsford had been pastor of a church. During their stay here they have made many friends who expressed regret upon hearing of their plan to leave Xenia.

The Lunsford family expects to move to Cincinnati the latter part of the month and will be at home after April 1 at 5340 Tanner Ave., Pleasant Ridge.

Wanted—Love! The Story of an Unemployed Girl

READ THIS FIRST: Lillian Abbott, 18-year-old sub-deb, raised in severe New England atmosphere, decides she wants a career and answers an ad in a New York paper calling for girls to be trained for the movies. She secures a personal interview with Thomas Blane, head of the movie school company, at her home in Salem, Mass., and arranges to go with him to New York without notifying her parents and after drawing her savings, $2,000, from the bank. They arrive in New York and Blane takes her to an obscure hotel and enters her room with her. Lillian removes her coat, hat and gloves, and Blane, seeing a diamond on her finger, takes it for safekeeping. (NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY)

CHAPTER 8 "SAY—what a girl. You haven't opened up your present, yet," said Blane, reaching for the box of flowers he had thrown on the bed when they first came into the hotel room. "Oh," said Lillian, I'm sorry. I—I guess I forgot." "Forgot about my first present to you? Goodness, what a girl you are!" She began untying the red cord about the pastboard box. Then she dug down under the green waxed paper and uncovered a cluster of yellow roses. There were only six roses, but there was ever so much tenderness. And the way the florist had arranged the bouquet made it seem quite large. Lillian said: "And I love yellow roses too!" "I thought you would. I always think a brunette girl ought to have yellow roses. That is—a pretty girl." "Weren't you nice to remember them though?" She picked them up and looked about the room for a vase. There was none. But on the little night table there was a large glass water pitcher. She never would have thought of putting flowers in a water pitcher, but Blane did. He caught up the pitcher and went into the bathroom and filled it with water. "Here," he said, returning, "is just the thing. How 'bout it?" Lillian thought it was a good idea and she plunged the flowers and fern into the pitcher. It was so filled with water that the stems of the fern and blossoms made it run over. Water splattered over the carpet and on one of Lillian's white gloves which still lay on the floor. "Aw well," said Blane, bringing a bath towel from the other room and blotting up the water and then wiping off the bottom of the dripping pitcher. "Don't worry about a little thing like that." He picked up her splattered glove. "I'll buy you another pair, dear," he said, flinging the glove on the bureau. Lillian placed the pitcher of flowers on the bureau. "They are beautiful, Blane. Thank you ever so much." "You're beautiful. When I first saw your picture I said: 'Blane, there's a girl after your own heart.'"

"And when I saw you in person, why I said: 'Blane, if you don't be careful you're going to fall in love with that baby.'"

"He knew by the way Lillian's eyes sparkled when he said that that it would not be at all unpleasant if he should."

It was the first time he had said anything about falling in love. Lillian it would be like to have a man of the world in love with you? Lillian could not let her eyes meet Blane just then. He might read her thoughts. It must be very different, from having a college boy in love with you. That meant going around to dances and football games and teas. It meant getting corsages. It meant wearing his fraternity pin. And giving him first chance at your dance program. It meant getting letters about three times a week—and having thrilling little things to tell about him to your girl chum. It also meant having your father and your aunts asking guarded little questions about him—to determine whether there was anything serious in his mind. . . . Was there any thought of marriage—yet. And if he were of a sufficiently historical family, and if his family had somehow kept some of the old property, etc. . . . why, you could tell that your father listened most intently to what you said about him. But, being in love with a man of the world . . . a man like Blane. What would that be like? Lillian wondered. She had never kissed a man with a mustache. He would expect to kiss her . . . were he in love with her. She could not imagine what kissing Thomas Blane would be like. . . . certainly nothing else that ever had happened to her . . . the thought of that fine light mustache pressed against her lips made her tingle. "What are you thinking about, lovely thing?" Blane asked, catching her arm just above the elbow and standing near her. "Oh . . . nothing," she said, flushing. She backed away from him, and dropped down on a chair. "Why don't we sit down?" "All right," he said, and he sat on the side of the bed. "There's another chair. Here," she said, "take this one." She pulled a chair to the side of the bed. "No, this is all right. More comfortable. Why don't you sit over here with me?" Lillian said: "I'd rather sit here, I think." Did he really think she would sit on the bed beside him? Or, was he just pretending he thought she would. Well, perhaps it was all right, but to Lillian it seemed a breach in etiquette, sitting on the bed with a man when there were chairs right there. "Let's talk about—about my career," Lillian said, after a little awkward pause. "Why, yes—but, say, there's time enough for that sort of thing. The most important thing now is you're here in New York! Isn't that something?" "It's—it's too wonderful to believe. Blane—I'm terribly thrilled over it!" "Are you? How thrilled are you, baby? Tell Blane." "Oh—I can't tell you how delighted I am. To think—I've really left home. At last!"

"You ought to be glad. We ought to do a little celebrating. That's what we ought to do!" He got up from the bed and took two glasses from the table and filled them half full of water. "Listen—now, don't you say you won't drink a little drink, you hear?" He poured some liquor from his hip flask into both of the glasses. Then he passed one to her. "Well, I won't tell you—but I won't drink this, either," she said. But she smiled. "Gonna keep on being a New England prude, eh?" said Blane, displeasure in his eyes. "Don't call me that, Blane—why at least I've come away from there—from New England." "Yeah—but you might as well have stayed if you are going to keep on being a prude. Won't take a drink . . . not just a little one." Lillian laughed and smelled the drink he had fixed. "I don't even like the way it smells. I know it would make me absolutely ill if I tasted it." "Not game to try it?" "I'm game, but—please don't insist. Blane." He didn't say anything, but lifted his glass and emptied half of it before he said: "All right. But—you'll change. See, if you don't."

REV. LUNSFORD HAS RESIGNED BAPTIST CHURCH PASTORATE

The Rev. Joel R. Lunsford, pastor of the First Baptist Church, here four and one half years, presented his resignation to the congregation at the morning services Sunday. It will be officially acted upon at a business meeting of the church Wednesday night.

The Rev. Mr. Lunsford has been connected with the Inter-Southern Life Insurance Co., while here and upon leaving Xenia will become joint supervisor of the Inter-Southern and Missouri State Life Insurance Co., with offices in Cincinnati. Although he will have no regular preaching charge the minister expects to fill a pulpit in the Cincinnati vicinity every Sunday.

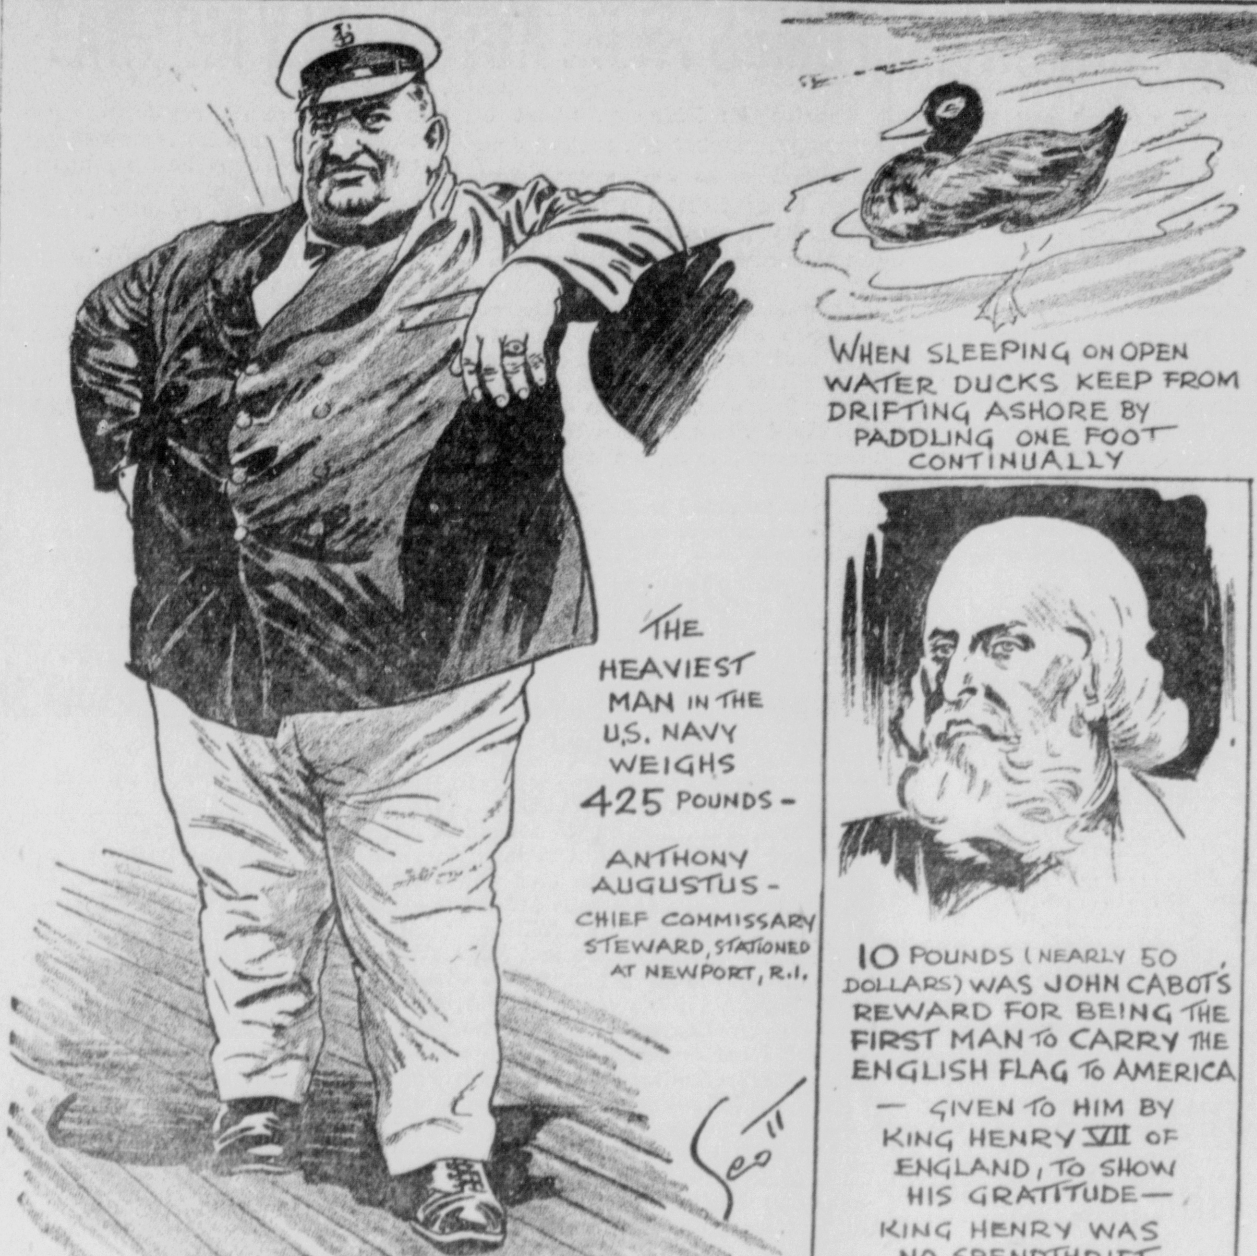

The Rev. and Mrs. Lunsford and family came to Xenia in December, 1927 from Cincinnati, where the Rev. Mr. Lunsford had been pastor of a church. During their stay here they have made many friends who expressed regret upon hearing of their plan to leave Xenia.

The Lunsford family expects to move to Cincinnati the latter part of the month and will be at home after April 1 at 5340 Tanner Ave., Pleasant Ridge.

Fannie Hurst To Help Observe Club Week

By MILDRED MASON

SPECIAL mention of the celebration of National Business Women's Week March 6 to 12 will be made in programs on the air this week. The first program of this nature will be on the air Tuesday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock when Fannie Hurst, novelist, will be guest speaker. Her subject will be, "Women Seem to be People." The program will be broadcast over an NBC network through WSAI, Cincinnati.

Other Business Women's Week programs on the air Tuesday include a talk, "The Young Woman and Her Business" broadcast through WSAI, Cincinnati, at 6 p. m. and another talk, "The Girl and Her Work," through WSAI, at 6:30 p. m.

Authors on Air.

Mrs. Albert H. Morrill (Lily Logan), a leading citizen of Cincinnati, and author of the forthcoming book, "My Confederate Girlhood," will speak over WLW, Cincinnati, Tuesday at 9 a. m. Her subject will be "Thomas Jefferson's Influence on His Friends' Homes." Mrs. Morrill is a granddaughter of the Civil War figure, Gen. T. M. Logan.

Hink and Dink in Air.

Hink and Dink, WLW's famed black-face comedy team, who are on the air every Tuesday evening at 8:30 o'clock, expect to be up in the air much of the time during their weekly broadcasts now that Hink has acquired an airplane. From now on the black-face team will operate a "Hink and Dink Rapid Transit."

Congresswoman to Speak.

Ruth Bryan Owen, congresswoman from the fourth Florida district and daughter of William Jennings Bryan, will be guest speaker on a program over an NBC-WJZ network Tuesday at 9 p. m. No definite subject has been announced for the representative but she will discuss the modern woman in business and professional life as part of a program being carried out in connection with the observance of National Business Women's Week.

Brokers' Returns.

Norman Brokenshire, with his "How do you do, ladies and gentlemen, how do you do?" returns as master of ceremonies in a program to be inaugurated over the Columbia network through WKRC, Cincinnati, Tuesday at 10:15 p. m. Norman, who is billed as "society's playboy" will be featured on a program with Welcome Lewis, contralto, and Nat Brusloff's Orchestra.

Open Cincinnati Engagement.

Horace Heidt and his Californians will be heard over stations WLW and WSAI, Cincinnati, for the next few weeks while they are filling an engagement at a Cincinnati hotel. They succeed Henry Busse's Orchestra.

Wanted—Love! The Story of an Unemployed Girl

READ THIS FIRST: Lillian Abbott, 18-year-old sub-dub, raised in severe New England atmosphere, decides she wants a career and answers an ad in a New York paper calling for girls to be trained for the movies. She secures a personal interview with Thomas Blane, head of the movie school company, at her home in Salem, Mass., and arranges to go with him to New York without notifying her parents and after drawing her savings, $2,000, from the bank. They arrive in New York and Blane takes her to an obscure hotel and enters her room with her. Lillian removes her coat, hat and gloves, and Blane, seeing a diamond on her finger, takes it for safekeeping. (NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY)

CHAPTER 8

"SAY—what a girl. You haven't opened up your present, yet," said Blane, reaching for the box of flowers he had thrown on the bed when they first came into the hotel room.

"Oh," said Lillian, I'm sorry. I—I guess I forgot."

"Forgot about my first present to you? Goodness, what a girl you are!"

She began untying the red cord about the postcard box. Then she dug down under the green waxed paper and uncovered a cluster of yellow roses.

There were only six roses, but there was ever so much tenderness. And the way the florist had arranged the bouquet made it seem quite large.

Lillian said: "And I love yellow roses too!"

"I thought you would. I always think a brunette girl ought to have yellow roses. That is—a pretty girl."

"Weren't you nice to remember them, though?"

She picked them up and looked about the room for a vase. There was none.

But on the little night table there was a large glass water pitcher. She never would have thought of putting flowers in a water pitcher, but Blane did.

He caught up the pitcher and went into the bathroom and filled it with water.

"Here," he said, returning, "is just the thing. How 'bout it?"

Lillian thought it was a good idea and she plunged the flowers and fern into the pitcher. It was so filled with water that the stems of the fern and blossoms made it run over. Water splattered over the carpet and on one of Lillian's white gloves which still lay on the floor.

"As well," said Blane, bringing a bath towel from the other room and blotting up the water and then wiping off the bottom of the dripping pitcher. "Don't worry about a little thing like that."

He picked up her spattered glove. "I'll buy you another pair, dear."

He said, flinging the glove on the bureau.

Lillian placed the pitcher of flowers on the bureau. "They are beautiful, Blane. Thank you ever so much."

"You're beautiful. When I first saw your picture I said: 'Blane, there's a girl after your own heart.'"

Lillian smiled.

"And when I saw you in person, why I said: 'Blane, if you don't be careful you're going to fall in love with that baby.'"

"He knew by the way Lillian's eyes sparkled when he said that that it would not be at all unpleasant if he should—"

It was the first time he had said anything about falling in love. What it would be like to have a man of the world in love with you? Lillian could not let her eyes meet Blane just then. He might read her thoughts.

It must be very different, from having a college boy in love with you.

That meant going around to dances and football games and teas. I meant getting coarser. It meant wearing his fraternity pin. And giving him first chance at your dance program. It meant getting letters about three times a week—and having thrilling little things to tell about him to your girl chum.

It also meant having your father and your aunts asking guarded little questions about him—to determine whether there was anything serious in his mind... was there any thought of marriage—yet.

And if he were of a sufficiently historical family, and if his family had somehow kept some of the old property, etc., etc., etc., could tell that your father listened more intently to what you said about him.

But, being in love with a man of the world... a man like Blane.

What would that be like? Lillian wondered.

She had never kissed a man with a mustache. He would expect to kiss her... were he in love with her.

She could not imagine what kissing Thomas Blane would be like... certainly nothing else that ever had happened to her... the thought of that fine light mustache pressed against her lips made her tingle.

"What are you thinking about, lovely thing?" Blane asked, catching her arm just above the elbow and standing near her.

"Oh... nothing," she said, flushing. She backed away from him, and dropped down on a chair. "Why don't we sit down?"

Broadway Not So Bad Gives Jane All It Had

Kindergarten teacher, Sunday School teacher, daughter of a banker, granddaughter of a minister, Ziegfeld show girl and now Broadway star—that's Jane Alden, lovely night-gale of George White's "Scandals," whose real name is Henrietta Enck.

Her grandmother was a Viennese lady. On her father's side she is descended from the Aldens of New England. She is a living example which is fresh from the presses as a novel. Ruth Chatterton says he is the best leading man she ever had. Brent is 27 and was born in Dublin where, as a youngster, he was a junior player at the famous Abbey Theater. He has played in stock and minor roles on Broadway in this country. He is a brunette, six feet and one inch tall. He appears first in "So Big."

One of the big film thrills of all times was the opening of the Red Sea in "The Ten Commandments." Maybe Paramount is counting on this to help interest the public in the projected talkie version. Leo Birensky, who had a hand in the writing of "Mata Hari," is working on the idea. The original was made in 1923 with Leatrice Joy, Theodore Kosloff, Theodore Roberts and others in the silent cast.

Twenty Years '12-Ago-'32

For thirty years the Old Town Run Protective Association, oldest group of its kind in the country, has guarded the property of the prominent farmers who form its membership. Thieves did not bother the property of a single member last year.

The L. S. Hyman family is preparing to move from the Kelly property on E. Church St. to the Bailey house on E. Market St.

Mr. C. S. Frazer spent Tuesday in Columbus attending the annual convention of the Retail Shoe Dealers' Association.

Joan Blondell
Has taken up pole.

that a girl can pull herself to the top in the show business by her own bootstraps (or whatever she wears).

When Jane, who first sang in public at the age of three, decided to go to New York, her father said he would never give her a cent. After family negotiations he permitted her to go with her mother.

She was shopping one day when a theatrical agent was struck by her appearance and asked her if she would care to go on the stage. She got a job as stage model in a road show of Irene Castle, dancer. The star singer fell ill and she asked for a chance. She made her debut in Detroit. She thinks Broadway is tough and sweet.

"I've been down to my last ten cents lots of times on the way up. And somebody—without expecting anything in return—would come forward to offer a loan until I got back on my feet. That's Broadway—always knocking you down and picking you up."

She has softly blonde hair, blue-gray-green, purple eyes, is a perfect 16 in the waist and is always smiling. Robert Joseph, the book designer, is her husband. She has appeared in "Rosalie," "Say When," "Street Singer," "Green Grow the Lilacs" and "Streets of New York."

Warners are reported to have a new find, perhaps another Gable, in George Brent, young Irish actor, who is to have his third role in quick succession in the Joan Blondell picture, "Miss Pinkerton."

XENIA EMPLOYMENT BUREAU MOVES HAS FARM LABOR LISTED

The free employment bureau being operated here by various agencies headed by the Xenia Retail Merchants Association was moved Monday from a second-floor room on W. Main St. to 18 E. Market St., where it will occupy quarters formerly the home of the Peoples Building and Savings Co.

Mrs. H. R. Wirthlin, in charge of the bureau, called attention Monday to the fact that the bureau is in position to render valuable aid to farmers and housewives in obtaining labor this spring.

Bureau records list farm managers, tenant farmers and many applications for farm labor of any kind, the applicants ranging in age from grown boys to men of middle age. In addition the bureau lists a number of landscape gardeners and men trained in tree and shrubbery pruning and other forms of gardening work.

Women applicants listed include women seeking general housework, cooking or maid's work and are available for either city or rural positions or for temporary work during housecleaning time. Farmers seeking help or housewives needing part or full-time employees are invited to visit the employment office for information on applicants.

The new location will give the bureau a ground-floor room and make the quarters more accessible to patrons.

COUNTY COMMITTEE CANDIDATES FILE; NO CONTESTS SEEN

Fourteen candidates for the Greene County Republican Central Committee and three candidates for the Democratic Central Committee had filed their nominating petitions with the board of elections Saturday. So far no contest for a committee seat has developed in either party.

Twenty-four committeemen are to be elected by each party at the May 10 primary.

It is announced that March 11 is the deadline date for filing declarations of candidacy for all offices.

Candidates who have filed for the Republican Central Committee are: Joseph H. Adams, Xenia third ward; C. F. Snedker, Fairfield village; Fred Wheeler, Xenia Twp.; James Laurens, Spring Valley Twp.; W. E. Crites, Spring Valley village; Harry Armstrong, Bath Twp.; S. W. Guyton, Xenia second ward; W. C. St. John, New Jasper Twp.; C. M. Williamson, Sugar Creek Twp.; Frank C. Lackey, Ross Twp.; Elder R. Corry, Miami Twp.; Charles W. Moorman, Jamestown village; S. F. McKnight, Xenia fourth ward; George Killeen, Xenia first ward.

The three Democratic Central Committee candidates who have filed are: Henry A. Jason, Xenia fourth ward; Emmett P. Ratchford, Xenia third ward; Robert McNamee, Xenia first ward.

RUN-AWAY YOUTH IS BACK HOME

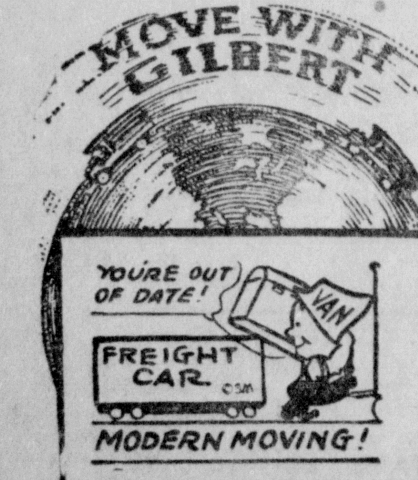

"He just ran away." That was all the explanation Attorney Charles F. Points, Wilberforce, had to offer Tuesday for the disappearance of his 12-year-old half brother, Frederick Ryan Points, who vanished mysteriously last October 20 and was finally located at Baltimore, Md.

Upon receiving information that the missing boy had been found at Baltimore, the Wilberforce attorney went to that city Friday, returning home with the youth Monday morning. Points said the boy had not been abducted, as he at first had feared.

PROCLAMATION

Mayor Jacob Kany issued the following proclamation for Business Women's Week, which is to be observed here March 6-12 and is being sponsored in cities throughout the United States by Business and Professional Women's Clubs:

"Whereas, the Business and Professional Woman's Club, of Xenia is one of the outstanding and at the same time civic minded organizations of our community, numbering among its membership seventy-five women engaged in all types of local business, encouraging ethics in business relationships, assisting in various forms of community work, and

"Whereas, the local club, a non-partisan and non-sectarian organization, includes among its membership some of the best known women in the city, and

"Whereas, this club is affiliated with the National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs, numbering 1,250 with a total membership of over 60,000 and

"Whereas, the national organization has set aside the week of March 6 to 12 as 'National Business Women's Week', which will be appropriately celebrated throughout the land,

"I, therefore, as mayor of the city of Xenia, do proclaim locally the week of March 6 to 12 as 'National Business Women's Week' and call upon all citizens of Xenia to cooperate in every way to make this week a successful celebration for the members of the local club.

Mayor Jacob Kany.

MANAGEMENT OF PAPER CHANGED

William Reid, mayor of Jamestown, assumed the management of the Greene County Journal, a weekly published at Jamestown, Saturday succeeding Mrs. Hazel Palmer, Cassopolis, Mich.

Mrs. Palmer has managed the paper since January 1, 1930 when she succeeded John Baughn, when he became sheriff. Mrs. Palmer, who was formerly on the staff of The Vigilance, published at Cassopolis, has not announced her future plans.

FACE COVERED WITH PIMPLES

"My complexion was very poor because of pimples and blackheads which covered my face and neck. John Harewood and Marvin Tarplay, were escorted up the beautiful river Nile by a most impressive ceremony. After the initiation, the fraternity was invited into the board dining room, where a sumptuous banquet was served. The following are local members of the fraternity: Dr. Gilbert H. Jones, Dean F. A. McGinnis, Professor and Mrs. A. J. White, Professor and Mrs. C. F. David, Mrs. Leonora C. Lane, Mrs. Anna M. Terry, Mrs. Edna Woodson, Miss Gladys Powell, Professor R. N. Pyrtle, and Professor E. Champ Warriel.

The white and green color scheme was most artistically carried out in the decorations and candies. White carnations and ferns were used in profusion.

A scholarly address was delivered to those assembled, by Professor R. N. Pyrtle, head of the department of biology.

The four students initiated were selected on account of their unusually high scholarship.

XENIA EMPLOYMENT BUREAU MOVES HAS FARM LABOR LISTED

The free employment bureau being operated here by various agencies headed by the Xenia Retail Merchants Association was moved Monday from a second-floor room on W. Main St. to 18 E. Market St., where it will occupy quarters formerly the home of the Peoples Building and Savings Co.

Mrs. H. R. Wirtzlin, in charge of the bureau, called attention Monday to the fact that the bureau is in position to render valuable aid to farmers and housewives in obtaining labor this spring.

Bureau records list farm managers, tenant farmers and many applications for farm labor of all kinds, the applicants ranging in age from grown boys to men of middle age. In addition the bureau lists a number of landscape gardeners and men trained in tree and shrubbery pruning and other forms of gardening work.

Women applicants listed include women seeking general housework, cooking or maid's work and are available for either city or rural positions or for temporary work during housecleaning time. Farmers seeking help on housework, needing part or full-time employees are invited to visit the employment office for information on applicants.

The new location will give the bureau a ground-floor room and make the quarters more accessible to patrons.

COUNTY COMMITTEE CANDIDATES FILE: NO CONTESTS SEEN

Fourteen candidates for the Greene County Republican Central Committee and three candidates for the Democratic Central Committee had filed their nominating petitions with the board of elections Saturday. So far no contest for a committee seat has developed in either party.

Twenty-four committeemen are to be elected by each party at the May 10 primary.

It is announced that March 11 is the deadline date for filing declarations of candidacy for all offices.

Candidates who have filed for the Republican Central Committee are: Joseph H. Adams, Xenia third ward; C. F. Snediker, Fairfield village; Fred Wheeler, Xenia Twp.; James Laurens, Spring Valley Twp.; W. E. Crites, Spring Valley village; Harry Armstrong, Bath Twp.; S. W. Guyton, Xenia second ward; W. C. The three Democratic Central Committee candidates who have filed are: Henry A. Jackson, Xenia fourth ward; Emmett P. Rathford, Xenia third ward; Robert McNamee, Xenia first ward.

RUN-AWAY YOUTH IS BACK HOME

"He just ran away." That was all the explanation Attorney Charles F. Points, Wilberforce, had to offer Tuesday for the disappearance of his 13-year-old half brother, Frederick Ryan Points, who vanished mysteriously last October 29 and was finally located at Baltimore, Md.

Upon receiving information that the missing boy had been found at Baltimore, the Wilberforce attorney went to that city Friday, returning home with the youth Monday morning. Points said the boy had not been abducted, as he at first had feared.

PROCLAMATION

Mayor Jacob Kany issued the following proclamation for Business Women's Week, which is to be observed here March 6-12 and is being sponsored in cities throughout the United States by Business and Professional Women's Clubs:

"Whereas, the Business and Professional Woman's Club, of Xenia is one of the outstanding and at the same time civic minded, organizations of our community, numbering among its membership seventy-five women engaged in all types of local business, encouraging ethics in business relationships, assisting in various forms of community work, and

"Whereas, the local club, a non-partisan and non-sectarian organization, includes among its membership some of the best known women in the city, and

"Whereas, this club is affiliated with the National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs, numbering 1,250 with a total membership of over 60,000 and

"Whereas, the national organization has set aside the week of March 6 to 12 as 'National Business Women's Week', which will be appropriately celebrated throughout the land,

"I, therefore, as mayor of the city of Xenia, do proclaim locally the week of March 6 to 12 as 'National Business Women's Week' and call upon all citizens of Xenia to cooperate in every way to make this week a successful celebration for the members of the local club.

Mayor Jacob Kany.

MANAGEMENT OF PAPER CHANGED

William Reid, mayor of Jamestown, assumed the management of the Greene County Journal, a weekly published at Jamestown, Saturday succeeding Mrs. Hazel Palmer, Cassopolis, Mich.

Mrs. Palmer has managed the paper since January 1, 1930 when she succeeded John Baughn, when he became sheriff. Mrs. Palmer, who was formerly on the staff of The Vigilance, published at Cassopolis, has not announced her future plans.

Saturday evening, February 27, the Sen Mer Rehn, an honorary scholarship fraternity of Wilberforce University, held its annual initiation in the home economics building.

This organization, unlike most, lays the foundation of its ritual in Egyptian civilization and culture.

Four neophytes, in the person of the Misses Mary Frances Turner and Josephine Bryant; Messrs.

W. Saulsbury and Mack M. Greene, given at the home of Mr. and Mrs. B. J. Wailes, where dancing to the tune of strains of a musical combination composed of Messrs. Frank Calliman, piano; Al Cobb, saxophone and Ralph Kinchen, saxophone, furnished entertainment for the evening. At a late hour, a delicious repast was served.
